off of a square base and both street elevations being of identical architectural treatment. The only variation being the prominent threestory Robert Street entry.

A steel skeleton is utilized for the superstructure with the exterior facing composed of quarry faced granite through the first two floors and red pressed brick through the remaining fourteen floors. Noteworthy, also, is the cast iron sculptured relief and masonry arched treatment which is utilized to break the building mass at the tenth and eleventh floors.

The intenior sports a rare feature in Minnesota commercial buildings; a skylighted well, about which all office space functions and which extends through all but the first floor within the building. The space is nearly original with the only changes being the addition of a lower level "open air" restaurant and the metal and glass enclosure of the semi-circular staircase for compliance with fire code regulations.

The Endicott Building is a six-story, L-shaped structure wrapping around the Pioneer Building. It was originally free standing of the corner structure, being separated by a narrow service alley which has since been utilized as expansion and enclosed circulation space. The building interior is most noted for the shopping arcade which extends along the entire first floor. Like the Pioneer Building, the Endicott Building is commercial on the first floor with office space above.

The Endicott Building has two quite architecturally different street faccades. The Robert Street faccade is considerably less stylized than its Fourth Street counterpart with a colonnaded first floor separated into five segments; reflective of the window arrangement through the five floors above. The faccade is broken by three cornice lines; one immediately above the first floor columns, the second between the third and fourth floors and the third at the roof line. The exterior facing is again red pressed brick with the only ornamentation being at the S

The Fourth Street fagcade by comparison is much more stylistically refined being modeled on a Renaissance Italian Palazzo motif. The exterior, which has undergone changes only at the reglazed entry, is faced with red sandstone at the street level and red pressed brick above. Ornamentation is restricted to the sandstone treatment around the windows and at the roof line. The most distinctive feature is the third floor arched loggia with carved stone balcony.

The Fourth Street faccade also has the more interesting interior entry lobby which is somewhat misleading from outside appearances. Due to a drop in grade along Fourth Street, the first floor is reached by climbing a broad stairway immediately upon entrance of the building. The attractive lobby space is relatively unchanged and still retains an impressive four color marble treatment.

As with the Pioneer Building, the Endicott Building is a steel structure with a masonry exterior skin. It was constructed during the late 1890s.
