DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Site includes two buildings: a combined trading house and living quarters, and a small warehouse. When development of the site by the Museum Association began in 1955, they were ruins in depressions in the virgin sod. Both buildings have been completely reconstructed to original lines and grades, including all post holes, as developed by thorough archeological investigations. Details of construction were furnished by John Bissonette, aged son of trader Joseph Bissonette, who visited the post in 1872. Construction details include log walls (using hand-hewn logs from a ranch house constructed nearby ca. 1880), cedar roof poles, sod roof and rough-sawn pine doors and counters, all as described by John Bissonette and as demonstrated by archeological evidence.

Large building is $13' - 3'' \times 27' - 6''$, including trade room $18' -9'' \times 13' -3''$ and living room $8' -9'' \times 13' -3''$. Small warehouse is $6' -10'' \times 13' -0''$. Reconstruction work is of excellent quality and buildings were used in filming fur trade sequences for orientation film now used at Jefferson National Expansion Memorial in St. Louis.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE			Vernan Co

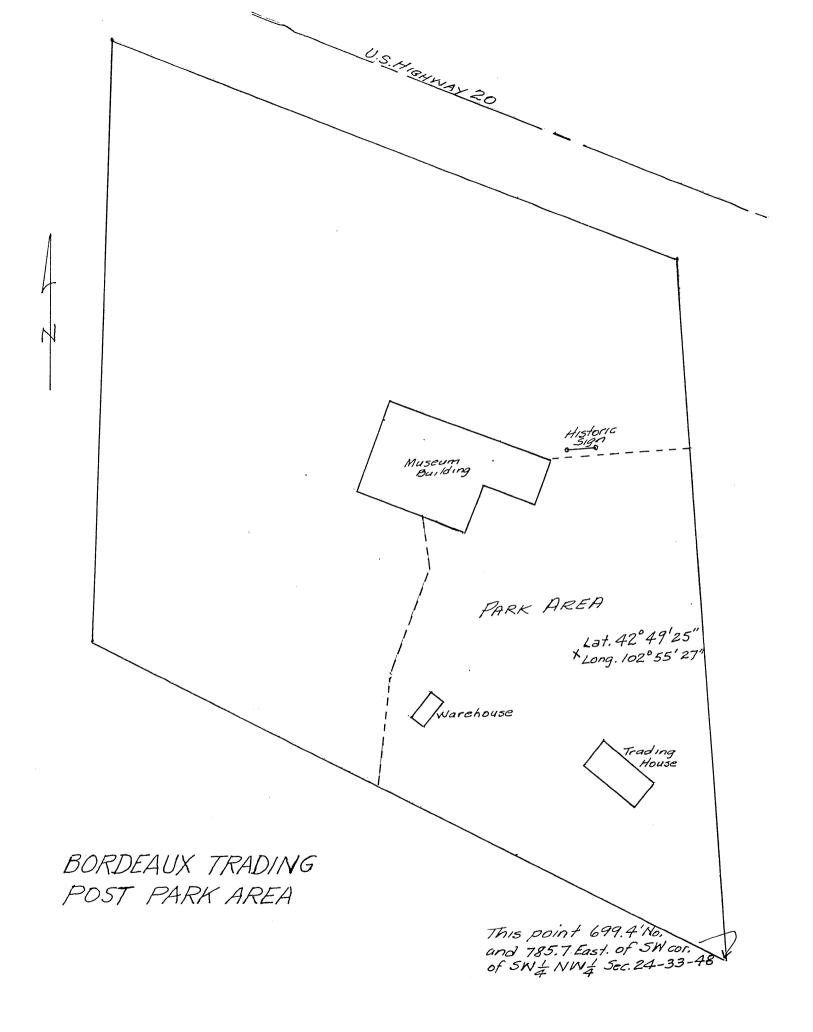

This typical small trading house was established in the winter of 1845-46 by James Bordeaux while in the employ of Pierre Chouteau Jr. & Co. Provision for his outfit was covered in correspondence between Alexander Culbertson and Joseph Picotte in the summer of 1845. Bordeaux occupied an important position at Ft. Laramie and was mentioned at length by Fremont, Parkman and Matthew Field. He later established headquarters on the Platte near the site of the Grattan massacre but maintained this small post in northwestern Nebraska for 26 years and carried on a successful trade with the Sioux through its use.

This post was the scene of an attack and raid on his horse herd by a Crow war party under White Bear in October 1849. A pursuing Brule Sioux party intercepted the raiders near the later site of Crawford, Nebraska and this action gave the name "Crow Butte" to a prominent landmark there. The creek beside the trading post was called "Bordeaux Creek" and still bears that name.

From 1872 until about 1876 this post was occupied by F. C. Boucher, another trader. In the summer of 1876 a military detail confiscated 40,000 rounds of Winchester ammunition at the post to prevent their sale to hostile Sioux.

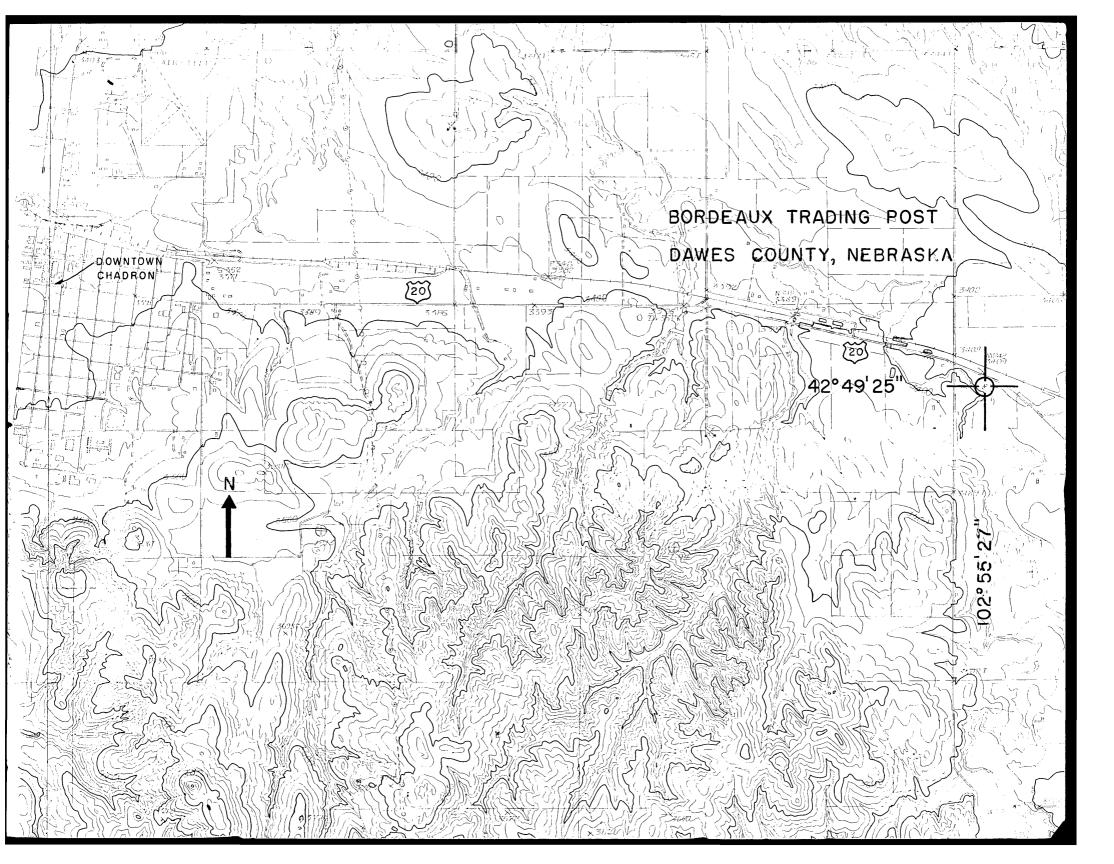

Of all the trading post sites in northwestern Nebraska, this is the best documented and has had the most colorful history. It is, intimately associated with James Bordeaux, F. C. Boucher and Joseph Bissonette, who established his headquarters as sub-agent at a small trading post one half mile below this site about 1872.
