DESCRIBE THE DESCRIPT AND ODICINAL (if frame) DUVICE A ADDICATE AND ODICINAL (if frame)

The Church of the Assumption is built in the Romanesque style, however without transept (the usual crossing of transverse arms of a cross-shaped church, usually between the nave and the chancel). The design is based upon the work of Friedrich von Gaertner on the famous Ludwigskirche in Munich. Assumption is constructed on a foundation of local limestone 185 feet in length and eighty-five feet in width. The two towers at the south are identical, reaching a height of 210 feet. The total exterior facade treatment is of coursed ashlar (limestone) accentuated by pilasters of brush-hammered limestone blocks -- the effect being that of well-defined bays. The length of the church is eight such bays. The whole is sheathed with a slate roof. At the ridge of the gable and at the summits of the towers are mounted iron crosses. Over the main entry is a statue of St. Mary's Assumption.

The interior arrangement of the church consists of a small narrhex opening into a clerestoried nave with a vaulted aisle on either side. From the exterior, these aisles appear to have lean-to-like roofs. The nave, from main entrance to sanctuary, has a length of 145 feet, a width of thirty-eight feet, and a height of sixty feet to the boss of the quadripartite rib vault.

The side aisles are 140 feet in length, sixteen feet in width and thirty feet in height. The sanctuary floor rises three and one-half feet above the level of the nave and forms a semi-circle twenty feet in depth and thirty feet in width. The apse with half dome is setting for the elaborate four-tiered wooden altar. Above the altar is a frescoed scene of the Assumption of Mary into Heaven which completely fills the half-dome.

To the rear of the side aisles are the sacristies, enclosed in elaborate wrought iron. They are fifteen feet by sixteen feet in dimension. Above these rises the choir loft with its monumental architecturally wood-cased pipe organ and elaborate rose window.

In regard to furnishings, the church has been retained in original appearance. In addition to the altar, the pulpit and flanking shrines were installed during the construction in 1873. At this date the pews and confessionals were also manufactured and plaster and painting of frescoes were near completion. The four bells in the east tower were installed in 1874. Three of these, the Saint Peter bell (weighing 2743 pounds), the Saint Clemens bell (weighing 336 pounds), and the Saint Joseph bell (weighing 1155 pounds) were new at that time. The fourth is the old bell from the original church of 1858. When rung together the four bells chime a harmonious D-Moll.

Assumption Church is presently in a good state of preservation, however tension rods have been installed in the past to counteract the outward force of the vaults on the limestone walls. It continues to serve its original function, and plans indicate continued preservation effort.

The first Church of the Assumption was established with the separation of the German Catholics from the Cathedral parish (St. Paul) in 1856. By 1858 a church building had been constructed (across from the site of the present building). Charge of this new parish was taken by the Abbot Rupert of St. John's Abbey near present-day Collegeville, Minnesota. In addition the parish assumed two missions in Hastings and Oakdale -a distance from Saint Paul.

By 1869 the original Assumption Church was noted to be too small and beginning to deteriorate. Plans were then made by the Pastor Father Clement Staub, O.S.B. to construct a large stone edifice. Contact was made with German architect, Joseph Reidl, court architect to the ruling Wittelsbach family in Bavaria, who was asked to design the church. Reidl (1813-85) had been a pupil in the studio of the architect Friedrich won Gaertner who dominated the scene of the German Romanesque Revival in the Ninteenth Century.

Reidl accepted commission to design Assumption Church and based this design on von Gaertner's famous Ludwigskirche in Munich. In 1870 the ground was broken and foundation work begun. By June 4 of 1871 the corner stone had been laid and all contracts for construction signed. All masonry work and stone dressing was provided by Schlick, Erd and Bahnholzer of Saint Paul. Throughout construction a sense of alarm was present among visiting Abbots, clergy and parishioners as to the size and cost of the proposed structure, however construction continued and debts accumulated. Father Clement Staub himself suffered a severe nervous breakdown during construction as a result of overtaxation of his strength.

The new church was consecrated on 18 October 1874. The church served the state's largest parish, but located as it was in the business district of Saint Paul, it met the needs of transients. Colman Barry, in his book Worship and Work stated, "It stands today as a memorial to the architectural pioneering of the German people of Saint Paul and their early Benedictine pastors". This statement is further reinforced by George N. Schuster who noted this contribution as recently as 1953, when he wrote:

8. Significance

"In downtown Saint Paul you will find the old church of the Assumption dwarfed by the grandeur of the new Cathedral erected on the hill above it, but still in many respects more significant. For the Assumption came right out of the heart of the German Rhineland, is as close as the builders could come to the score of small ministers in which the glory of Mainz or Maria Laach was scaled down to meet the needs and desires of lesser towns like Andernach. It belongs where it was put up, because at the time it was the Catholic Rhineland which moved into Minnesota."

Thus, Assumption church stands today as a significant statement of both Saint Paul's architectural and German pioneer heritage, as well as being recognized statewide for these same reasons.
