A fea	ature of the Francis Wilcom	a James house is its chimney that	disappears and reappears a	again. The mansion has some of the fa	anciest shingles in the sta	atethree types of patterns.
Inlai	id hardwood parquet floors	in the entrance hall and the master's	suite were unusual in Port	Townsend at the time this home was built. The stairs are finished with wild cherrywood brought around Cape Horn from Virginia and carved locally in a spiral design on the newel post. There are five usable fireplaces and four others that have been sealed off.

Upstairs the whole front section on the right of the second floor was the master's suite, with dressing room and arched alcove for bay window and a sliding glass door leading to the captain's walk in front of it.

The house has filagree door knobs and hand-carved bronze hinges. All of the woodwork is finished with medallions clear to the third floor. Brick walls in the basement are 18 inches thick.

The carriage house on the property was once taller than the residence, having a tank on top that furnished water to part of the town, for James had an artesian well on his property.

Francis Wilcox James, a native of England, arrived in Port Townsend in 1853 and became a customs inspector. He built his house about 1889 for his wife in New England, but she died before coming west. James became head inspector, and was so highly thought of that when the steamship Southerner was wrecked south of Cape Flattery in 1855, he was sent to render assistance and to guard the interests of the owners of the vessel. He remained at La Push for almost a year, and was so well liked by the Indians, that they gave the name of James Island to the mass of rock lying at the mouth of the Quillayute River in honor of him.

When he returned to Port Townsend, Mr James opened a trading store which he operated profitably until 1882 when he retired from active business and devoted his attention to his large private affairs, and at the time of his death in 1920, left one of the largest estates ever accumulated in Jefferson County.
