Architectural Data

The architectural significance of the Columbus Iron Works is not nearly so important to Columbus as its place at the forefront of the city's history. This building was constructed in 1853, and its most obvious feature is its graduated, red brick facade. The five windows in the middle section of the facade are rounded at the top and each is capped with an unusual brick design which protrudes from the face of the wall. The front of the building is divided into three sections by four half-columns of brick. The style of the building is typical of early nineteenth century warehouses.

Historic Data

The Columbus Iron Works Company was established in 1853, an outgrowth of the Columbus Iron Foundry which was in operation in 1847. It was engaged in general repair work, water wheels, steamboat repairs, brass and iron castings. Columbus Iron Works, incorporated in 1857, became the arsenal of the Confederacy and was known then as "Confederate Naval Iron Works" with Major James H. Warner in charge. In this plant were manufactured guns, gun boats and other implements of war. It is recorded fact that Columbus produced more for the Confederacy than any other city except Richmond, Virginia. When General Wilson's Raiders took Columbus in the last battle of the war, the complete plant was destroyed along with two gun boats then under construction. The plant was destroyed by fire on April 19, 1865. One month later the stock holders met and took possession of the ruins and started rebuilding . By September 1865, the plant was again in operation. In early 1870, the Company started work on Ice Making Machinery and in June 1872, the Columbus Ice Manufacturing Company was built and put into operation by Columbus Iron Works Company. This was the first commercial ice plant in the country, and many plants were erected in the years following. Dr. John Gerrie of Apalachicola, Florida invented the first mechanical ice machine in 1851 and after its manufacture by the /Iron works here was placed in the Smithsonian Instituter In 1863, the Columbus Iron Works produced a breech-loading cannon, also believed to have been the first of its kind. This cannon made from the wheel shaft of the sunken river steamer, John C. Calhoun, now stands mounted in the Iron Works building. At the rear of the main plant is the old steamboat landing where Chattahoochee river packets began to dock in 1828. April 10, 1902 the plant was again destroyed by fire and everything was in ruins. By 1903, the plant was back in operation, having rebuilt and enlarged. ⊥n 1925, Mr. W.C. Bradley and Associates bought control of the company. Columbus Iron Works Company remainded a corporation until July, 1965. It then merged with and became a division of W. C. Bradley Company. The merger was made to further strengthen the overall financial position of the company. Here again planning toward expansion and even greater diversification. In 1927, the company began the manufacture of stoves and heaters in order to provide tonnage for the Foundry operation. About 1948, the company started making a few small outdoor cookers. They were extremely successful and the Char-Broil outdoor cooker line has expanded so much that it is now one of the major products.

In 1955, a Drop Forging Department was added. This is one of the few sources of commercial drop forgings in the Southeast.

In addition to the manufacturing departments, they have had a Supply Division which has been existence for many years. It now serves Columbus and a wide surrounding area with electrical, plumbing, and mill supplies.

In 1964, building began on a much larger, more modern, mechanized addition Foundry and in April, 1965 the Foundry operations opened in city location. It is located in the Bradley Industrial Park just off Hamilton and Whitewille Road.

The Company provides regular employment for approximately 650 people and is growing steadily. It has remained in business since 1853 and has a record of fair treatment to employees, strong civic achievements, and good relationship with its customers.

ments, and good relationship with its customers. In January 5, 1835, the governor of the State of Georgia deeded part of Coweta Reserve to Edward Featherston. September13, 1838, the state deeded Lot 16 to Hans Peter Albrecht; it is on this lot that the Columbus Iron Works now stands.

It is doubly important that this site be registered in that it is only a block from the Historic District and is to be included in the urban renewal project.
