Resource Count/Significance:

The Resource Count is revised to read: 1 contributing building and 2 non-contributing buildings.
[The house was built in 1937 and is set within the identified period of significance, but both garages (1955 and 1975) were completed outside the period of significance. The documentation provides no basis or justification for characterizing the 1955 garage as contributing other than the fact that it was built over 50 years ago.]

Narrative Description

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance and condition of the property. Describe contributing and noncontributing resources if applicable. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, type, style, method of construction, setting, size, and significant features. Indicate whether the property has historic integrity.)

Summary Paragraph

The Ray F. and Ethel Smith House is a 1½-story English Tudor period revival cottage. The house is located at 1697 East Vine Street, Murray, Salt Lake County, Utah. Constructed in 1937, the house is stucco-covered frame construction with brick details on a concrete foundation. The exterior has an addition to the rear, but no other significant exterior modifications. The house is located on a large 0.66-acre lot in a residential neighborhood. There is a contributing garage constructed in 1955 and a non-contributing garage constructed in 1975. The Ray F. and Ethel Smith House retains its architectural integrity design, materials, workmanship, location, association and feeling. The setting has been somewhat compromised by the loss of the surrounding farmland to residential development, but this does not impact the architectural significance. The property meets the registration requirements of the Historic Resources of Murray City, Utah, 1859-1967 Multiple Property Listing and Submission (MPS) within the Residential Buildings and Associated Secondary Buildings/Structures property type category. The Ray F. and Ethel Smith House is a contributing historic resource in its east Murray neighborhood.

Narrative Description

Exterior

The Ray F. and Ethel Smith House is an excellent example of English Tudor-style period revival cottage architecture. It incorporates most English Tudor characteristic elements including an asymmetrical façade, steeply-pitched gable roof, stucco walls with areas of exposed brick, a round-arched brickwork opening on the front porch, diamond-pane and tall windows with multiple small lights, polychromatic brick and stone in a textured pattern. The house is a later example of period cottage and does not contain exposed faux half-timbering members nor ornate barge boards but does have a brick chimney.¹ The primary façade material is beige colored textured stucco and the roof is tile simulating wood shakes.² All of the windows in the house are original wood casement or fixed windows with storm window coverings.

The façade (south elevation) has a large, centered gable extending out from the main building. The gable has three casement windows on the main level with diamond lights, wood frames and brick sills. The second story has a single casement window with leaded and colored-glass diamond patterned lights. The gable is further exposed on the west side and has a double casement window facing west which mirrors the window height and styling on the gable front windows. The gable is flanked by a double casement window on the left and the smaller front porch gable entry on the right. The double casement windows are wood with six lights in wood muntins. The front porch roof has a small gable and the entry is an arched opening with exposed, multi-color striated brick. The porch also contains an exposed brick surrounded view opening to the east. The front door is original wood with small window lights. There is a tall, narrow wood casement window with six lights and brick sill to the east of the porch gable. The front façade contains a tall brick chimney in good condition. The façade also has two exposed small basement casement windows.

The east elevation has French doors flanked by casement windows and an octagonal bay. The French doors open from the living room out onto an uncovered patio. The doors are wood with small surrounding glass and large glass center panels. The octagonal bay has a hipped turret roof and three small casement windows. This elevation has a complex hipped roof and a single gable dormer on the largest roof element. The gable dormer has a six-light casement window.

The west elevation has two six-light casement windows on the main floor, a gable dormer matching the east elevation and four basement windows.

The north elevation contains two small six-light casement windows and a shed roofed extension from the main house wall. A shed-roofed covered patio/sun room with entry door has been added to the extension. The sun room is wood and glass with a small area of simulated stone and siding around its lower perimeter. The covered patio/sun room is 28 feet by 16 feet.³

Interior

On the interior, the Smith House has 1,381 square feet on the main floor, 480 square feet of finished attic space, and 880 square feet of mostly finished basement space. There are four bedrooms and two bathrooms. The living room has one fireplace and originally had wood floors.⁴

Setting/Site

The Smith House sits on a 0.66-acre parcel. The property is rectangular and has mature landscaping including four large trees along the south and east perimeter. The house had an earlier house built circa 1894 located directly in front which was demolished when the 1937 house was completed. The lot was part of a large farm and dairy ranch which has been replaced with residential infill primarily since the 1960s. Historic photographs show a large dairy barn to the east of the house. Today, the property has a contributing garage constructed in 1955 and a non-contributing garage constructed in 1975. The 1697 E.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The Ray F. and Ethel Smith House, built in 1937, is a 1½-story period revival-style, stucco cottage, located at 187 E. 5600 South in Murray, Utah. The house is locally significant under Criterion C in the area of Architecture as an excellent and unusual example of the English Tudor period revival-style cottages in Murray. The building has a large amount of sophisticated detail for the period, including diamond-pane casement windows, brick ornamentation, and a unique octagonal side bay. The period of significance is the date of construction: 1937. The property is significant as a rare example of an English Tudor period revival cottage built as a farmhouse decades before the property was annexed into the suburban neighborhoods of Murray. The building differs from the typical English Tudor cottage of the period in its large, square footprint with the octagonal bay, the original stucco, and its placement setback from the street within its original farm holdings. The property has good historic integrity with some minor modifications to the rear and interior. The property is eligible within the Multiple Property Listing and Submission (MPS), Historic Resources of Murray City, 1859-1967. Because the Murray MPS is organized by building types, the associated historic context is the “Americanization of Murray’s Residential Architecture, 1902-1965.”

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

Architectural Significance

The Ray F. and Ethel Smith House is an excellent example of English Tudor-style period revival cottage architecture. It incorporates most English Tudor characteristic elements including: an asymmetrical façade, steeply pitched gable roof, stucco walls with exposed brick, round-arched brickwork opening on the front porch, leaded-glass diamond-pane lights, polychromatic brick and stone in a textured pattern and a thick tile roof. Constructed in 1937, the house is stucco covered frame construction with brick details on a concrete foundation. The builder is unknown.

The English Tudor style was popular in Utah between 1920 and 1940. A database of architectural resources maintained by the Utah SHPO has identified over 7,000 period revival cottages in Utah. The majority of those are all-brick English-style cottages. It was especially popular with returning World War I veterans after their experiences in Europe. The Smith House is one of twenty significant and twenty-one contributing period cottage houses in Murray, Utah. It is one of only three cottages which have only all-stucco exteriors without additional brick, timber or siding surfaces.⁵ The majority of English Tudor or English Cottage-style period revival houses in Murray were built in the downtown residential area in the 1920s and 1930s. With the exception of the stucco-covered 226 Maple Street, all are primarily brick residences with narrow facades and rectangular footprints. Out of the four English Tudor cottages built in the outlying parts of Murray’s original boundaries, there is only one other all-stucco English-style cottage built within the original boundaries of Murray City, at 187 E. 5600 South in 1925 when south Murray was still semi-rural.⁶

The Smith House is located within an area that was annexed into Murray in 2001. The neighborhood is sometimes referred to as the Cottonwood area historically. Prior to that time, it was unincorporated. In the 1930s, the area was exclusively agricultural. Of the five period revival cottages identified in the annexed area, the Smith House is the only stucco and frame example.⁷ The Smith House stands out from among Murray's other period revival examples in several ways. The Maple Street house has a similar, but less elaborate rowlock brick surround on a rounded door but is much smaller and boxier than the Smith House with no additional ornamentation. It is a period cottage in a bungalow neighborhood. The house on Vine Street also has a smaller box footprint and has no brick accents, although it too was part of a larger rural parcel.

The Smith House is the only example in any material with an octagonal side bay. The Smith House is much larger than the typical English-style cottage in Murray, which reflects its use as a farmhouse rather than an early suburban tract house. The diamond-pane windows and brick details illustrate an unusual amount of detail and sophistication compared to other period revival cottages in Murray and the surrounding areas. There is no comparable English Tudor-style cottage in the formerly rural communities that are now part of the greater suburban Salt Lake Valley.

Additional Historic Context

The Ray F. and Ethel Smith House is associated with the George W. Smith and Joseph Newman families, who were early settlers and farmed in the Big Cottonwood area, which is now part of Murray, Utah. The Smith family operated a large dairy farm on the property and Ray later operated the Mount Olympus Farm Dairy from the house at 1697 East Vine Street.⁸ Elizabeth Ann Newman Smith received title to 20 acres containing his parcel on February 23, 1893 from her mother Elizabeth Payne Newman Ferguson. Elizabeth Payne's father James Payne had purchased it from Isaac Ferguson on December 18, 1871. Isaac Ferguson later married Elizabeth Payne in 1874 after her short marriage to Joseph Newman. The Salt Lake County land deed was recorded after the property was patented by Isaac Ferguson on March 10, 1870.⁹

Elizabeth Ann Newman Smith was born April 6, 1863 in Big Cottonwood (Murray) to Joseph Newman and Elizabeth Payne, immigrants from England. Elizabeth Payne was the second polygamist wife of Joseph Newman and the marriage did not last.¹⁰ Elizabeth Ann Newman was the only child of their marriage.¹¹ Elizabeth Ann Newman married George Fred Smith at age eighteen on October 28, 1881 in Murray, Utah. George Fred Smith was born December 28, 1859 in Farmington, Utah to George William and Catherine Wooten Smith.

George W. and Catherine Smith had emigrated from England to Utah in 1855 with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. George W Smith was a successful farmer who moved to the Holladay/Cottonwood area in 1873. George F. and Elizabeth farmed the area east and south of the Ray F. and Ethel Smith House, and lived in a house just east of the Ray F. and Ethel Smith House at 1725 East Vine Street.¹² George and Elizabeth had seven children, before Elizabeth's untimely death on February 1, ⁷ Murray has two other examples of all-stucco houses of the period, but one is in the Pueblo Revival style and the other is an Art Moderne style house. The city has several examples of the Colonial Revival style, but none that use stucco as a primary material.

1895. George married Mary Elizabeth Taubman January 31, 1896 in Big Cottonwood, Utah and they also had seven children. George Smith also served as a trustee for the first public school in Big Cottonwood and was road supervisor for a number of years.¹³

George Fred and Mary Smith deeded this parcel to their oldest son Raymont (Ray) Fred Smith June 27, 1929. The property already contained an old house constructed in 1894. Ray F. Smith was born June 16, 1896 in Big Cottonwood, Utah. He did not attend formal schooling after age eight but worked on his father's farm. He later attended school and completed one year of college.¹⁴ Ray served in the United State Marine Corps during World War I, with service in California and Virginia.¹⁵ Ray married Ethel Naylor June 20, 1923 in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Ethel Naylor was born March 18, 1903 to Fred Naylor and Emma Battle Naylor. She grew up on her parents' farm and attended one year of college.¹⁶ After their marriage, Ray farmed and worked as a postal clerk and Ethel taught elementary school.¹⁷ Ray operated the Mount Olympus Farm Dairy starting in 1931.¹⁸ In 1936-7, Ray and Ethel constructed the house at 1697 East Vine Street. They had seven children in 28 years. Ray later served as the Chaplain for the Utah State Prison for four years and co-chaired a committee to build a new chapel at the prison.¹⁹ Ray died of thyroid cancer on December 3, 1959.

Ethel continued living in the house until her death April 16, 1975.²⁰ After Ethel's death, on March 24, 1981, the house passed to two of her children and their spouses: David & Shirley Woody, Carole & Richard Gasser. The property was transferred solely to Carole S Gasser on August 3, 1990 from her husband Richard Gasser. Carole later married Craig Cook and they continue to own the house.²¹

Abstract/Summary Comments: The Ray F. and Ethel Smith House is locally significant under National Register Criterion C (Architecture). The 1 1/2-story stucco and wood-frame residence is a fine local example of English Tudor Revival style domestic design. A bit more elaborately detailed and scaled than the typical modest period revival cottages in the community, the property meets the Registration Requirements and Property Type context for the Historic Resources of Murray City MPS.
