The Gunnell House is architecturally significant as one of three houses in the county originally constructed as a dogtrot, and is the only post-Civil War example. Its split log walls joined with $\frac{1}{2}$ -dovetailed corners are characteristic of folk houses of this period. The house maintains a high level of integrity because it has not been modernized in any way. (Open center hall is presently filled with hay).

Historically the house has been associated with the Gunnell family and is still owned by their descendants. It was constructed by Nicholas R. Gunnell following the Civil War although the adjoining 80 acres were purchased by Nicholas Gunnell (Sr.) in 1825. The Gunnells were early Lawrence Co. settlers in the southwestern section of the county and eventually owned 480 acres in
