DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Preservation recommended

Originally, this was a small, L-shaped structure of two stories. The bottom floor was of stone while the upper floor had a wood exterior.

In 1931, the building was remodelled and enlarged, and converted into a residence. The addition maintained architecturally and structurally the same style, which is a cross between early National Park Service and Swiss chalet.

The upper floor, today, has eight rooms, and the old portion of the house is easily identified by its random width oak flooring. The new portion is also oak, but its boards are of narrow width.

The upper portion has the living room, dining room, kitchen, and the usual assortment of bedrooms and baths. There is a stone fireplace in the living room and one in the dining room.

Another addition in 1931 was a porch and enclosed entrance way into the living room, making the main access way into the house.

Downstairs is the basement-like area which contains a large family room (the old visitor information office) with another stone fireplace. A labyrinth of corridors and rooms connect to a two-car garage. Half the garage is now occupied by a heating plant.

The walls of the basement are stone with plaster over those in the living area. The upstairs walls are lath and plaster.

Boundary: South side bounded by South Entrance Road, west by El Tovar Hotel entrance road, on the north by the south edge of the parking lot behind Verkamps Souvenir Shop, and on the east by a line running perpendicular from South Entrance Road to the edge of Verkamps parking lot, passing about 100 feet from the east side of the building.

Completed in the autumn of 1921, this structure served as Grand Canyon National Park's first administrative headquarters. The visitor-information room was provided for by a donation from the newspaper Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

From this building the good, gray superintendents supervised the running of the park and saw to its early growth and development. From here rangers were dispatched to rescue a novice hiker lost or exhausted on one of the trails to the canyon or to fight a fire started by a careless camper. The early-day visitors came here seeking information about the park and to see primitive exhibits, telling the story of the park. Here was the beginning of the Park Service's administration and interpretation of one of the country's great national parks.

The building was remodelled in 1931 at which time it was expanded to its present size. In 1931, it was converted into the Park Superintendent's residence and has served in that capacity since.

The significance of this structure lies in its long and varied association with the administrative history of the park. In that category of history, it is the most important surviving structure in the park.
