Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

Constructed in 1879, the Rosebud Hotel is a square, two-story frame building with a hipped-roof, center chimney, and two interior rear chimneys on the north and south. The exterior walls are covered with wood lap siding. The foundation is stone. Simple, wooden frames enclose all rectangular, double-hung windows. Sashes throughout are 6/6 lights. The west, north and south facades are marked into three bays on both stories, while fenestration is doubled (upper story) or tripled (lower) to the rear. The open porch on the front facade (west) spans the three-bay design. A shingled pediment with simple wood brace in the peak marks the center of the hip-roof over the entrance to the building. The covered post and lattice-like rail enclosure was once carried around to the north and south sides. Corrugated aluminum covers the foundation area under the floor to either side of the run of cement steps.

A smaller version of the front porch covers the entrance on the south. A one-story addition was constructed to the rear, consisting of a windowed center projection and twin entrances set back to either side. Simple, lathe-cut bracketed canopies cover these single doors on the first-story, and are repeated over the doors at the ends of the second-story overhead; metal rails enclose the walkway over the flat roof of first-story addition, linking the doors. Ground-level access is provided by a flight of wooden stairs to the deck.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

Significant in the areas of politics, government, social community, and Lakota Indian Culture, the Rosebud Hotel was built in 1879 by the federal government to house visiting officials from Washington, and unmarried agency employees. Erected one year after the Rosebud Sioux Agency was established, the name of the hotel and reservation was taken from the wild roses, which bloom on the hillsides around the agency site. During the early years, seven of the nine hotel rooms were used by the regular boarders, and two were reserved for visitors. In the 1930's the hotel was called the Employees Club and was used exclusively by unmarried agency employees, who also managed the club. In 1937 the boarding house was converted to apartments for agency personnel. At present the building serves as the Rosebud Tribal Office.
