DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Albert Spencer Wilcox Building of the Kaua'i Museum complex was designed by Hart Wood, one of Hawaii's foremost architects, and construction started in 1922. This building was designed as a single storied structure of beige concrete and native black and brown lava rock with a half basement and a high pitched blue tile roof. It is a typical Hawaiian design of Hart Wood who emphasized the use of native lava rock and the adaptation of the steep Hawaiian grass roof to contemporary architecture.

The entrance lanai is a frontispiece rectilinear projection of concrete scored to look like cut stone, with three arched openings. Each arch is flanked by four Roman Ionic columns from which the arches spring. Between each of the columns is a small recessed half round display niche in a semidome form with a concrete frame. Above these are smaller niches with pediment projections and urns with square bases in the niches. Above the arches a molded beltcourse surrounds the entry portico. Above the beltcourse is a simple arch capped with a small molded cornice. Over the center arch is a broken pediment which projects above the parapet roof line. Entrance to the lanai is gained by eight brick risers.

The rear of the building has a projection of concrete and native lava rock which forms what was the reading lanai of the library. The roof of this projection stops at the wall intersection to create a clerestory and admit light at the upper area of the main room. The gable end walls and rear wall are rock veneer on concrete of native lava rock set at horizontal bands divided with concrete strips.

All windows in this building are steel framed paned windows, hinged at the top, with concrete lintel and sill and splayed on the interior space. In the center of each gabled end wall of the building is a palladian window with a concrete voissoir. Corresponding to the three arches of the entry lanai were three sets of double doors each with steel frames and glass windows.

The interior of the main area was a two story space with a barrel vaulted ceiling. In 1957 the small staff room constructed of cement bricks and flat roof were added to the rear of the building. The original architectural plans allowed for the addition of mezzanines. In 1958 there two mezzanine balconies designed by Wood, Weed and Kubala were added to provide additional library space. In 1969, the Kaua'i Museum added the long connecting balcony designed by Geoffrey W. Fairfax, A.I.A., across the rear wall for display space. Also at this time the center doors of the entrance lanai were converted into a large display case.

The Kaua'i Museum was originally the first library on Kaua'i island. Designed by prominent Honolulu architect Hart Wood the building housed the Kaua'i Library until Statehood was achieved. After implementation of a new statewide library system in 1969 the old building became the home of the Kaua'i Musuem. Currently, the building is in excellent condition and is receiving excellent care.

Before its construction, a library was located in the Sunday School rooms of the Lihu'e Union Church and a surrey carried books around the island, a service started by Reverend J. M. Lydgate in 1900. The library was begun with Reverend Lydgate's personal book collection.

In 1921, he led a group of citizens in their efforts to secure a separate library building and service. Mrs. Albert Spencer Wilcox responded with a $75,000 donation as a memorial to her husband.

Prominent Honolulu architect Hart Wood was chosen to design the building and Lihu'e Plantation sold the needed building site to the Kaua'i Public Library Association Limited for one dollar. The building contract went to John Hansen of Honolulu for $62,960.

Also during 1921, the territorial legislature passed the County Library Law which provided additional funds for the Lihu'e service.

The "first sod" was cut to begin the new library by Miss Alice Wilcox, the grandaughter of the benefactoress, on Founders Day, 1922.

The beautiful new building of lava rock and concrete with its Hawaiian roof was dedicated on May 24, 1924, the birthday of Albert Spencer Wilcox.

Besides serving its traditional role, the library became a center of information exchange on subjects and activities concerning Kaua'i.

When Hawai'i became a state, the library was placed under the statewide system and a new building was constructed in 1969. Since that time, the old library building has been the home of the Kaua'i Museum and has been renovated to house galleries for loan exhibits, school art shows, ethnic and heritage displays, the director's office, a gift shop, and archives. The museum was opened to the public in December, 1970.

The Albert Spencer Wilcox Building is a particularly fine example of a truly indigenous style of architecture, completely original to Hawaii with no counterpart anywhere else. It is the finest example of architecture in the downtown Lihue area. It is one of the few surviving Hart Wood designed buildings in the State of Hawaii.
