DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Located in Sulsun City, the Sulsun Masonic Lodge Number 55, F. & A.M., is a three-story rectangular building of brick construction. The building is 38 feet wide by 100 feet long. The front of the building faces east and is divided into five bays. On the first floor the bays are separated by embossed cast iron columns. The southernmost bay contains the entrance to the Masonic rooms upstairs. The original doors have been replaced with modern steel-framed fire-resistant doors set back about four feet from the sidewalk to form a paneled alcove. Three of the remaining bays have large plateglass windows topped with a four-light panel and a two-light panel. The fourth bay contains an entrance to the ground floor shop, which now houses an antique store. There was probably an awning over the sidewalk between the first and The second and third floors are divided into bays by five The second and fourth arches meet to form a sixth arch. Four arches are filled with stained glassed windows. The colorful panels depict masonic symbols, crucifixes and stars. The center arch is filled with brick and has a granite plaque embossed with the masonic symbol and lodge number. Each of the arches is fitted with a granite keystone. The roofline shows signs of repair work. The work was probably done to repair damage from the great 1906 earthquake which devastated San Francisco. The rear of the building has four openings on each floor. On the first floor, two of the openings accommodate doors. One is original and the other is a modern steel-framed fire-resistant door that was installed to meet current safety requirements. The other openings serve as windows. All openings were originally covered with metal covered wooden fire doors, but only three of these remain on the ground floor. Early in the century a steel fire escape was added to the rear of the building. The north and south walls of the building adjoin neighboring structures. The roof is a slightly pitched gable covered with asphalt composition roofing paper. The interior is decorated with hardwood wainscoting chair-rails and molding. There is a high vaulted ceiling and a balcony for musicians in the main lodge room.

The building has been altered structurally as noted above. These changes do not significantly affect its integrity.

<sup>1.</sup> The Solano Republican, April 20, 1906, Page 1, Column 2, reported that the front wall of the Masonic Hall had been cracked by the earthquake and that some bricks had fallen as a result. The repair may have changed the shape of the roofline, but this cannot be determined. A diligent search of private photographic collections in Suisun City and the California State Library of Sacramento did not reveal any pre-1906 pictures of the Suisun Lodge. The files of the Suisun City Planning Department do not contain information regarding repair work on the building.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Suisum Lodge Number 55 F. & A.M. built in 1855 is significant for its architectural style and for its historic associations with the development of Suisum City. Constructed originally as a lodge and retail store, the building has been continuously used for these functions since 1855. It is a good example of public and commercial architecture, common during the mid-19th Century in California and is significant for the excellence of its craftsmanship and design.

The Masonic Lodge was erected in 1855 by Hiram Rush, a mason and prominent Solano County rancher. Rush was prevailed upon by fellow lodge members to add additional floor space for a new lodge in the store building, which he was then constructing. In return, the lodge paid for the cost of the third floor. Rush subsequently deeded the property to the Masonic Order.

Rush was closely associated with the agricultural development of Solano County and California. He immigrated to California in 1849, engaged in livestock raising and eventually acquired 51,000 acres of land. This made him one of the wealthiest and most influential citizens in Solano County. The methods and materials employed in the construction of the lodge are in many ways typical of the period. Brick was considered to be superior for commercial construction because of its fire-resistant qualities. Because of the threat of fire in the 1850's, some cities required that buildings in commercial sections be constructed of brick or stone. Metal fire doors were usually employed as well, and such buildings were widely regarded as fireproof.<sup>2</sup> Cast iron fronts were also popular architectural details during the 1850's.

The Masonic Lodge's unique contribution to the Suisum City streetscape is the four colorful stained glass windows. The windows rise nearly two stories above the first floor. The Masonic Lodge is the largest building on Main Street, but the windows make its presence pleasant rather than oppressive or overbearing. Although the surrounding buildings are smaller, their design is compatible with the lodge. It has been noted in Item 7 that the building has been altered and repaired during the course of the century; nevertheless, the Suisum Lodge retains most of its original fabric and design character and remains as an impressive reminder of Suisum City's early years.
