Narrative Description

The Elmwood Park Historic District, listed in the National Register of Historic Places on 3 May 1991, is a collection of 279 primarily residential properties in the Elmwood Park neighborhood of Columbia. This includes portions of Abbeville and Aiken streets, Belleview Avenue, Bryan, Chester and Clark streets, Elmwood Avenue, Gadsden, Lincoln and Park streets, Price Avenue, Rembert and Wayne streets, and West Confederate Avenue. The district contains 219 contributing properties. The district's historic resources date from the turn of the twentieth century to 1940, and are representative of this era. The majority of properties were built between ca. 1900 and ca. 1920.

The historic district is a turn-of-the-twentieth century suburb of Columbia, South Carolina. It developed at a time of major suburban growth in the Columbia area. In 1900 Columbia's population numbered 21,108. By 1910 the population in the city had grown to 26,318, but the Chamber of Commerce estimated the population of the suburbs to be 11,000, predominantly white. Elmwood Park was one of many suburbs. A 1908 publication listed Columbia as having twenty-one "sub-divisions." Elmwood was described as having "a nice settlement...and much improvement is taking place." The Elmwood Park neighborhood is significant under Criterion A for its significance in Social History, and under Criterion C as a significant collection of architectural types. As a nearly intact suburb, it illustrates the turn-of-the-twentieth century shift in Columbia, and nationwide, to the suburbs. Architecturally, Elmwood Park is representative of the range of, but similarity in, house types in early suburbs. Elmwood Park illustrates the movement away from the elaborate Victorian era styles to the "comfortable house."<sup>1</sup>

The Fuller House, located at 2113 Park Street, directly across the street from Wardlaw Junior High School, which was listed in the National Register in 1984 and also included in the Elmwood Park Historic District listing in 1991, is a two-story, hip roofed, gable-front and wing residence with Queen Anne style massing and Classical Revival detailing. Set upon a brick pier foundation [now with recessed brick infill, except for front porch where it is open pier], the house is of balloon frame construction with weatherboard siding. Fenestration is regular with single windows of one-over-one, double-hung sash with shallow shelf architraves. The house features corner pilasters, a simple, unadorned frieze and boxed cornice. A one-story, two-bay wide hip roof front porch, located to the left [south] of the projecting gable, features Tuscan columns and a turned balustrade. The porch is accessed by brick steps at the center of the front elevation [right bay of porch] where the entrance door is located. Entrance door is single-leaf with glass upper panel, horizontal lower panels and simple surround with shallow shelf architrave. To the left of the entrance and within the porch is a single-leaf window; at right of entrance, on perpendicular wall, is a lozenge-shaped window. Centered atop the entrance bay is a one-bay wide porch with Tuscan columns, turned balustrade, pedimented gable and identically-placed lozenge-shaped window. The asphalt-clad complex roof, which includes a rear ell, is pierced by two corbel-capped chimneys. On the interior beaded board wainscoting remains intact, as does an entry hall containing a reverse staircase with square, molded-cap newel and turned balustrade.

A one-bay wide, hip roofed frame garage is to the immediate left [south] of the main residence and contributes to the historic significance of the property.

Narrative Statement of Significance

The Elmwood Park Historic District, consisting of 219 contributing properties and sixty noncontributing properties in the Elmwood Park neighborhood of Columbia, was listed in the National Register of Historic Places on 3 May 1991.

The Fuller House at 2113 Park Street, immediately adjacent to the Elmwood Park Historic District, was built ca. 1907 as part of one of Columbia's earliest suburban developments. During much of its existence [before 1924 until 1969], it was the home of the Clarence L. Fuller family.<sup>2</sup> In the period following World War II the house was extensively altered, with the front porch being enclosed, the application of asbestos shingle siding to the porch, the screening of the upstairs porch, the removal of several of the house's porches' columnal supports, and the application of Masonite siding to the body of the house. At the time of the nomination of the historic district, the house was owned by Exxon Corporation, much of its lot had been incorporated into the adjacent parcel where an Exxon gas station operated, and plans were underway to demolish the house. Given these circumstances and the fact that it was viewed as noncontributing to the National Register eligible historic district because it had been altered, as well as being on the edge of the historic district, the State Historic Preservation Office staff decided to exclude the property from the nominated district. The property was acquired later in 1991 by John Charles Herin, who undertook a significant rehabilitation of the house's exterior and interior, thus returning the house to its historic appearance. Further rehabilitative measures have been taken by the current owner.

Since the house now more accurately reflects the architectural and historic character of the early Columbia suburb of Elmwood Park, the boundaries of the Elmwood Park Historic District, as drawn in 1991, should be expanded to include this historic residence. Its inclusion is a correction of the historic district's boundaries in this area.
