Glore, William Milburn, House (Historic Resources of Boone County, Kentucky)

7. Description

The William Milburn Glore House (BE-294) is located on an 8-acre tract sited on a hilltop on the east side of Big Bone Road near Big Bone Lick State Park in Boone County, Kentucky. The nominated property consists of a c.1853 residence and four associated outbuildings, two of which—a log barn and a timber-frame tobacco barn--contribute to the significance of the property. A modern two-bay automobile garage dates from outside the Period of Significance and a smokehouse has been radically altered and are therefore non-contributing features within the context of the nomination. With reference to the Multiple Property Documentation Form, "Historic and Architectural Resources of the County of Boone, Kentucky," the residence is an example of Property Type IE, domestic architecture/central passage double-pile house, the log barn is associated with Property Subtype IIG(1), log barns and the tobacco barn is an example of Property Type 1G(5), tobacco barns.

The centerpiece of the property is the Glore House (Photos 1, 2, and 3; Resource A on the accompanying map), a stylish and well-preserved wood frame Gothic Revival dwelling of generous scale, which was constructed c. 1853. The wood frame house is built on the central-passage, double-pile plan and stands one-and-one-half stories in height and is three bays wide. The building is capped with a steeply-pitched cross-gabled roof clad in standing-seam metal; the roof and box gutters were installed in the wake of a 1993 wind storm which destroyed the original roof. Italianate-style "sandwich" brackets accent the eaves. Fenestration employs tall and narrow flat-topped windows and doors, also typical of the Italianate style of design. The main doorway is centered on the facade and incorporates a transom sash, sidelights, bull's-eye corner blocks, and chamfered colonettes; a matching doorway is on the second story, above the main door. A simple, one-bay, wooden entry porch is centered on the facade; it is a recent addition, but since it is restrained in its detailing, it fails to detract from the overall integrity of the building. An ell extends from the rear of the house and was enlarged in the 1990s; located on a secondary elevation, this alteration is without negative impact on the integrity of the property.

The interior of the house reflects a blend of Greek Revival and Italianate elements. The main parlor features simple Italianate shadow-box woodwork with mitred corners. The second parlor displays flat, Grecian-inspired moldings with "ears;" the woodwork and mantle retain their original grained finish. Modest, rectilinear woodwork is used in the other first-story rooms. Mantles consist of simple, trabeated wooden frames. The main central staircase (Photo 4), Italianate in style, incorporates a polygonal newel and turned spindles. An original wallpress survives in the main parlor. Three of the first-story rooms feature 1920s-vintage electric chandeliers of eclectic design, restored by the owners. Most doors retain mid-nineteenth century metal rimlocks. Apart from the conversion of the original kitchen to a utility room and the expansion of the rear ell to include a new kitchen, the floor plan has been little altered.

Two significant and well-preserved outbuildings remain on the property. Just north of the house is a distinctive doub1e-crib barn (Photo 5; Resource D) with an open central passage, constructed of unhewn logs secured by steeple notching. The log barn is enclosed by a shed of newer timber construction with an unfinished board-and-batten finish. Local historical sources suggest that the log barn served as the blacksmith shop of William Glore, the builder of the house. A large mid-nineteenth-century front-gabled, timber-frame tobacco barn stands along the highway north of the log barn (Photo 6; Resource E). Non-contributing features include a modern two-bay automobile garage (Photo 7; Resource C), and a gable-roofed wood smokehouse (Photo 8; Resource B). One of the gable ends of the smokehouse was completely removed in the process of converting the building for wood storage, significantly diminishing its integrity.

8. Significance

The William Milburn Glore House (BE-294) meets National Register eligibility under Criterion C, and is significant for its architectural design, as an individually-significant 1850s Gothic Revival-style farmhouse anchoring a mid-nineteenth-century Boone County farmstead. The restrained design of the house reflects a conservative interpretation of the Gothic Revival and Italianate styles of nineteenth-century design; the influence of the Gothic Revival style is evident in the form and massing of the house and in the lancet-arched window in the pediment of the gable on the facade. The Italianate style is seen in the eave brackets which are prominent features on the exterior surfaces. The house has recently been sensitively rehabilitated and retains a high degree of material integrity. The house is complemented by several agricultural and domestic outbuildings, including a timber frame tobacco barn and locally-rare example of a double-crib log barn. With reference to Section F of the Multiple Property Documentation Form, "Historic Resources of the County of Boone, Kentucky," the house meets the Registration Requirements for Property Type 1 resources (Domestic Architecture) and the historic outbuildings (the log barn and the tobacco barn) meet the requirements for Property Type II resources (Agricultural Outbuildings).

The house was built by William Milburn Glore, who was descended from Boone County pioneer Michael Klor. In 1801, William's grandfather, Samuel Glore, acquired two hundred acres from William Taft of Middlesex County, Virginia, who may have received the property in exchange for services during the Revolutionary War. Glore paid one dollar per acre for the tract, which was described in the deed as being "part of Taylor's Survey of two thousand acres near the Big Bone Lick." An epidemic, perhaps typhus, which affected only creekside residents, forced the Glores onto higher ground. William Glore wed Elizabeth Margaret Kite in 1839 and in 1853 purchased seventy acres of his grandfather's land, including the tract containing the nominated property. Glore was both a farmer and blacksmith, although he was noted on the 1883 D. J. Lake Atlas only as a farmer. Census data suggest that Glore was born in 1827; his land holdings once encompassed more than 1,000 acres, but various land partitionings have left a fifty-acre tract immediately associated with the farmstead. The Glores reared their twelve children in this house and were active members of Big Bone Baptist Church; they are buried in the cemetery associated with that church. The house reputedly cost $750 to build–a significant figure for rural Boone County of pre-Civil War era--and local tradition reports that while their neighbors thought the Glores foolish for such an extravagance, they nonetheless traveled from far and wide to inspect the house.

Following William Glore's death, the property passed to Maria Glore Finnell and her husband Benjamin. Their daughter, Adelia Finnell, inherited the entire farm and held it until 1963, when she sold it to William and Loretta Groening. The Groenings left the property to the Madison Avenue Christian Church in Covington in 1988; the present owners acquired the property from the church in 1993 and restored the house and dependencies.

Architecturally, the house blends elements of the Gothic Revival and Italianate styles of architecture. During the mid-nineteenth century, the Gothic Revival was a stylistic alternative to the Greek Revival, which had been the county's dominant architectural tradition. Unlike their Greek Revival and Italianate contemporaries, Gothic Revival houses are not numerous in Boone County; most examples are located near the Ohio River or along U. S. Highway 42, the former Louisville Turnpike. This tendency is consistent with the spatial distribution of stylish houses in the county: most fashionable dwellings are sited near the river, on major thoroughfares (especially the Louisville Pike), or around the county seat of Burlington, ten miles distant.

The classic Gothic Revival-style house exhibits a symmetrical three-bay facade with centered doorway, tall chimneys flanking the passage, a steeply-pitched roof with a dominant central gable, lancet-arched windows, and decorative bargeboard trim. While more pure examples of the style, most notably the Peter Gregory House in East Bend Bottoms, utilize this classic form, many master builders interpreted the style more liberally; the Glore house is the product of such a liberal interpretation, combined with the distinctive bracketry characteristic of the Italianate style. The William Milburn Glore House is one of only eleven Gothic Revival-style residences identified in Boone County; among these are the Peter Gregory House (BE-671), the Thomas Huey House (BE-1033), and the Jenkins-Berkshire House (BE-28), all of which are being nominated concomitant with the Glore House.

This property is additionally significant for the presence of the historic outbuildings on its cultural landscape. The earliest barns built by settlers were of log construction These simple, typically single-crib enclosures for livestock were built of unhewn logs or rough-hewn timbers secured by V-notching. Subsequently, some of these rudimentary structures were enclosed within a larger barn of timber-frame construction. These activities have protected several Boone County log barns, including the Glore barn. Related examples include a single-crib log barn on the William Riley Farm near Beaver, built of unhewn logs and enveloped in the mid-nineteenth century within a massive, timber-frame bank barn built into the slope of a hill. Far more examples were destroyed as agricultural technology matured. A single-crib log barn is found on the William Riley Farm (BE-253) and another, now demolished, was on Bullitsville Road (BE-514) Viewed within this context, the Glore barn is particularly significant as a rare surviving example of unhewn log construction and, following considerable survey activity, is the only double-crib barn identified to date in Boone County.
