DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Stoney Castle rests on a low rise above Lafferty Pike (KY 1054) in northern Harrison County, one mile west of the town of Berry. Facing westward, the two and one-half story stone structure overlooks the gently rolling farmland which characterizes the area.

Constructed in 1807, this block-like dwelling is five bays wide with a one-story wing on the rear. The facade is arranged asymmetrically with the door being situated to the right of center, thereby causing the windows to be unevenly spaced (see photo 1). This scheme affected the interior space by facilitating the creation of two rooms of generally equal size.

Original six-over-six pane windows remain visible on the rear but have been altered to two-over-two on the front. The cellar and first floor bays are capped by flat arches, and the keystone above the front door reveals the builder's initials and date of construction. The deep door jamb is paneled and the door itself is surmounted by a transom in which the original panes have been replaced with stained glass dating from ca. 1900, when it would appear alterations were made inside. Construction on the rear wing was also completed at this time.

The gabled roof is adorned with a simple cornice. The corbeled chimneys are set flush with the outside wall and are flanked by small, square gable windows.

The two-room ell, extending from the east side of the main house, was constructed in 1902 for use as a kitchen and service area. This date and the builder's initials, TWS, are inscribed in the keystone above the east gable end window. A small, brick chimney rises from the center of this addition. Running along the north side of the wing is a porch with shed roof supported by four turned posts (see photo 2). A similar shed-roofed porch has been added to the rear of the main house and abuts the ell.

The interior appears to have been based originally on the hall and parlor plan with the south room being slightly larger and containing the entrance. Enclosed stairs with winders in the southeast corner of each room led to the corresponding second floor rooms which do not connect with each other (see photo 3). The difference in the thickness of the interior walls would seem to indicate that the partition just to the right of the front entrance was added to create the narrow central hall from the larger parlor. In addition, a second narrow hall, running north-south behind this south room, was formed and this hall now contains the corner stairs (see plan).

Woodwork varies, thereby reflecting the evolution of styles and tastes. The south parlor retains a Greek Revival mantel (see photo 4) while the treatment of the doorway with the stained glass transom reveals the turn-of-the-century alterations. Door frames in the north room have simple, rounded moldings, yet a Victorian mantle adorns the fireplace. In the rear wing, narrow molding around doors and windows embodying concentric circle corner blocks as well as the stained glass transoms are indicative of the 1902 construction date of this section. The upstairs rooms display a similar variety of styles.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Situated on a rise overlooking the rolling farmland of rural Harrison County stands Stoney Castle, constructed by John Smith, one of the earliest settlers in the county, in 1807. Stoney Castle is one of six extant stone houses documented in Harrison County. Overall, the dwelling appears to be one of the best preserved of these half dozen known remaining structures. As such, the simple two and onehalf story, block-like residence with its one-story addition effectively represents the tradition of stone building brought to Kentucky in the 1780s by Scotch-Irish immigrants from Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia.

At the early age of sixteen John Smith came with his father Charles to what was then Fincastle County, Virginia, in 1775 from Orange County, Virginia, and built a log house on the South Licking at the mouth of Raven Creek (Perrin, History of Bourbon, Scott, Harrison, and Nicholas Counties, Kentucky, p. 317). In 1784 Charles Smith was given a 500 acre land grant for his services to the Revolutionary Army. During the war Smith had provided 1325 pounds of beef to the army (Wilson, "This Old House," p. 3).

In 1785 Charles Smith purchased 1,500 additional acres which adjoined his property with payment being made in maple sugar. It was on this adjoining land that John Smith built Stoney Castle in 1807. The house was located on the road used as the stage coach route from Cincinnati to Lexington (Ibid., p. 3). By the time Smith built his house, his land had been a part of Fincastle, Kentucky, Fayette, Bourbon, and Harrison Counties.

In 1829 John Smith was appointed Postmaster of the Mouth of Raven Creek Post Office, the first post office between Lexington and Covington. The post office was located in a front room of Smith's house. Smith served in this capacity for two years, and in 1831 was succeeded by his son Nathan who also served for two years (Ibid., p. 3).

During the Civil War General John Hunt Morgan and his men camped on the grounds of Stoney Castle for several days following the second Battle of Cynthiana (Ibid.,p. 3). According to family tradition Morgan and his officers dined in the Smith House while the troops were fed on the grounds.

Stoney Castle remained in the possession of the Smith family for approximately 150 years. The house is presently owned by John Milton Caldwell of Berry, Kentucky and continues its original function as a residence.

The nominated acreage was determined on the basis of its historical and visual qualities. Although none of the original outbuildings remain, there are several such structures of more recent construction which have been erected to the northeast side of the house These new buildings represent the continuing growth and progress of the property which has always served a a working farm. Overall, the surrounding area would appear to have lost little of its original agrarian character. Raven Creek and its tributary form natural boundaries, encircling the house on three sides. Within this given area the land rises gently to the knoll upon which Stoney Castle rests, commanding a view of the surrounding countryside for some distance. KY 1054, the western boundary, closely follows the path of the old stage route from Cincinnati to Lexington for which Stoney Castle served as a post stop. Stoney Castle CONTINUATION SHEET
