#574 Arturo Angel House, 926 S. Pacific, ill. 18.

4. Owner: Alfred Garcia, 926 S. Pacific, Las Vegas, N.M.
7. Description: Stuccoed foundation of unknown material; stuccoed adobe walls (1st), asphalt shingled wood frame (2nd and roof); exposed rafters (dormers), moderate enclosed eaves with frieze board (between floors); 4/1, 6/1 double-hung windows with wood surrounds; continuous wood lintels (2nd); single door in deep reveal; porch posts. Located one block south of the Distrito de Las Escuelas on a major street.
8. Significance: This particular combination of the Hispanic adobe tradition with late Anglo introduction from the Colonial Revival and, to a lesser extent, from the Bungalow Style, is unique in Las Vegas. The Colonial Revival houses built in New Town after 1900 typically had brick first floors and intersecting frame gables or gambrel roofs over a square or rectangular shape. The builder here substitutes adobe for brick, but retains the traditional single file(s) of rooms, in a T-shape. The narrowness of the base requires the lengthening of the first slope of the gambrel roof to maintain usable second floor space. That roof and the three-part window group recall the Colonial Revival Style; the exposed rafters of the dormers, the Bungalow Style; and the continuous lintels, the local Tudor Style.
Arturo, then Ramundo Angel lived here.
