Describe present and historic physical appearance.

The Madison County Courthouse is a detached two-story public building. The original rectangular plan of the building has been modified with the addition of a compatible one-story brick addition to the west and rear elevations of the building. This addition is well set back on the west wall. The front elevation of the building has seven bays with an outset, centered entrance. The building has a buff-colored pressed brick veneer laid in common bond. The foundation is concrete; the roof is flat. The entrance is demarked with a balustraded entablature supported on terra cotta columns in the Corinthian order. Outset brick pilasters divide the building into vertical bays, also with terra cotta capitals in the Corinthian order. Above the second-story windows is a terra cotta molding, surmounted by an attic story with grilled vents and a denticulated metal cornice.

The interior of the building retains a number of period features, including its plan, marble and tile hall floor, marble wainscoting in the hallway and stairwells, plaster walls, ceiling moldings, hallway pilasters, wood door moldings and single-pane office doors. The plan is based on a lateral front hallway, with double hallways perpendicular to it. Either side of the front hall is a stairway leading to the second floor.

Alterations to the building include the side and rear addition, which is set well back from the front elevation and which leaves the original structure clearly discernible. Windows have been replaced with metal-frame windows set into the original openings. Also, replacing the original entry doors are double metal-frame doors, set in the original molded wood frame. While the loss of original doors and windows has some effect on the building's integrity, the remaining original fabric conveys the important characteristics of Beaux Arts Classicism, and the building conveys a sense of the post-World War I period in which it was built.

State significance of property, and justify criteria, criteria considerations, and areas and periods of significance noted above.

The Madison County Courthouse is significant under criterion "A" in the context of the development of county government in Idaho. The building is significant under criterion "C" in the context of the architecture of Idaho's county courthouses and as a local example of institutional architecture. The building retains its original monumental massing and most of its Beaux Arts features, including its brick veneer, terra cotta detailing, seven-bay front, and formal interior plan and decorative features. The remaining original fabric conveys the important characteristics of Beaux Arts Classicism, and the building conveys a sense of the post-World War period in which it was built.

Madison County was established in 1913 by act of the Idaho legislature, and the county seat was located in Rexburg by a popular vote of nearly ten to one. Construction of a courthouse was considered upon formation of the county, but was delayed by World War I labor and cash shortages. In the interim the second story of a commercial building, the Webster-Winter building, was rented for county offices. The site for the building was purchased with county funds appropriated December 16, 1918, and a bond election held April 25, 1919, passed easily. Local labor for the project included the contractor, Charles Zollinger, and the architect, C.A. Sundberg. The courthouse was completed and county offices moved into the building in December 1920.

The Madison courthouse is one of two classical courthouses designed by C.A. Sundberg early in his career, and it is the more ambitious and elaborate design of the two. The other building, Power County Courthouse built in 1925, has similar two-story massing and symmetry but is much plainer, apparently influenced by the Prairie style. Like most of Idaho's county courthouses, the Madison courthouse is the most ambitious and stylistically elaborate architectural design in its locality and its region and deserves National Register listing on that basis as well as for its contribution to our understanding of the range of architectural designs used for courthouses in Idaho.
