Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Herald Building is located on the southwest corner of Short and Walnut streets indowntown Lexington. It is one block off Main Street and across the street from the Central Christian Church (listed on the National Register September 11, 1979). At the corner of Main and Walnut streets is a modern high-rise bank building.

121 Walnut Street is four-stories on a raised basement. (Photo 1)) The exterior is constructed of a buff colored brick on three sides with the rear of the building in red brick and has minimal stone trime. The lack of ornamentation on the building is a conscious effort to represent the character of the newspaper, which it housed as dignified and substantial. The first floor and raised basement are architecturally treated as a base for the three upper floors which have grouped windows within recessed panels between colossal pilasters. (Photo 2) These pilasters are set over a strong horizontal course above the first-story. (Photo 3) On the Walnut Street facade the two paired windows on either side of the main entrance are placed in recesses similar to the top three-floors and each of these recesses is crowned by a segmental arch. The windows on the sides of the building are flat-topped. The main entrance bay is through a round-arched recess just above street level in the center of the front facade. There is presently a canvas awning over the main entrance. Originally, there was no covering over the entrance as it is recessed and it has a decorative stone cartouche at the top of the arched entryway. (Photo 4) The cornice is metal of the dentil-and-modillion style with a parapet above on three sides of the flat roof. (Photo 5) The parapet on the front of the building is gabled in the center portion and has a decorative scroll with an H (for Herald) applied to it.

Since its original use as a newspaper office and workshop, to its present use as an office building, the interior has been altered several times to accommodate this. Some of the original attractive yellow, black and ivory tile facing can be seen in the inner entrance to the first floor.

In 1929, a harmonious two-story wing was added to the west side (rear) of the building. It is constructed of a buff-colored brick although somewhat more yellow in color. A conscious effort was made to blend this addition by have stone trimmed recesses to house the window groupings on the first floor, carrying out the same motif of the main building.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

This plain but handsome four-story commercial building occupies a conspicious position on the southwest corner of Short and Walnut streets in downtown Lexington. Designed by Lexington architects F. Paul Anderson and Leon K. Frankel (both professors at the University of Kentucky), this four-and-a-half story buff-colored pressed-brick building was intended to be dignified, handsome and substantial, consiously representing the character of the newspaper it was to house as both office and workshop. Both architects were prominent local practioners. Most of their work seems to have been in a somewhat severe Neo-Classical or Georgian Revival manner, with some reflection of Frankel's experience in engineering, as in the apparently structurally-inspired articulation of the walls of the Herald Building and the complex and evidently effective provision for comfortable, well-lit working conditions and up-to-date machinery in the interior. It was built for Desha Breckinridge, distinguished scion of a distinguished Kentucky family, who both published and edited The Lexington Herald, reflecting the civic and social ideals of himself and his noted first wife, Madeline McDowell Breckinridge. He purchased The Herald (founded in 1870 as the first daily newspaper in Lexington), served as editor after 1901, and soon became one of the leading Democratic editorial writers in the United States. In Kerr's History of Kentucky, it says the following about Desha Breckinridge: "He is a Democrat, but as an editor has been distinguished by his independent advocacy of men and measures who best expressed his ideals of the public welfare." After being sold by the Breckinridge heirs, the property was connected with the broadcasting industry as it was purchased by the American Broadcasting Corporation in 1937, who sold it to the Southern Network in 1946. Since 1955, it has functioned as an office building for various firms.

Deshas Breckinridge, the son of Colonel W.C.P. Breckinridge, controversial but popular politician, was born in 1867. He was educated under the special tutelage of novelist James Lane Allen, trained for the law, and practiced with his father in the firm of Breckinridge and Shelby before purchasing The Herald. His wife, Madeline McDowell Breckinridge (1872-1920), a grandaughter of Henry Clay, shared his ideals and was an extremely accomplished person in her own right. She was responsible for many advances in civil rights, the education of blacks, health and welfare, and other liberal causes.
