The former Allen County Jail is a two-story limestone block building, solidly constructed with walls two feet thick. The front of this rectangular rubble-stone structure has two barred windows on the second floor and one double door in the center front at ground level. The outward appearance of the building has not changed much over the years.

Steel cages were installed on the lower floor which was underlaid with rock. The second floor was intended as the jailer's quarters, but in the last years of operation, most prisoners were confined there rather than the lower floor.

The building now serves the Allen County Historical Society as a museum.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Citizens of Allen county voted a $10,000 bond in August, 1868, to build a jail. It was completed by October, 1869, by White and Hays, contractors, for a price of $8,400. Allen county had long needed a jail but quarreling factions from different parts of the county couldn't agree which town should have it.

The jail is claimed to be the first building in Allen county erected with county funds, and in 1869 it was said to be the finest jail in southeast Kansas. Apparently it was not very escape-proof. Local newspapers over the years report a sizable number of innates escaping, usually by cutting a hole in the roof or by removing a bar or two from a window.

In April, 1957, contracts were let for a new Allen county courthouse which would have a modern jail, and it was dedicated in January, 1959. Many people of Iola and Allen county wanted to preserve the old jail so a bill was introduced in the 1957 session of the state legislature authorizing the county commissioners to transfer the title to the Allen County Historical Society. After passage of the bill the transfer was made and the building is now a museum.

The building has significance for its long usage as a jail, almost 90 years, and it was probably the first building in Allen county built with county funds.
