View: Interior view. Standing in the center of the main room (dance floor) and looking up one can see the trestle type log roof supports which make it possible to eliminate pillar type roof supports. Along the lowest beam hang examples of the original hand-crafted light fixtures carved from logs. Bolts used in the construction are visible.

(stage area). Chandelier in front of fireplace chimney is original handcrafted design and has a companion which hangs in the east fireplace room. Stage floor is of raised construction and here one sees an example of the poured Torginal floor covering.

As mentioned in the description this west wall is an example of the building's walls which were constructed so as to be windproof without the use of chinking.

View: Standing in the center of the dance floor and looking east toward the east fireplace room notice the center wall. Between the two openings to the east room and above the row of chairs, the logs are laid in such a way as to allow an opening through which may be seen the chandelier which is the companion to the one suspended over the stage area. At the left in the photo may be seen the showcase and counter which now replace the original soda fountain. If you were to walk to the left behind the counter you would enter either the kitchen area or a stairway to the basement. At the right in the photo may be seen the second stairway to the basement area. This one is enclosed on two sides by logs, the stairs are located against the east wall as they descend down first to the south and a landing, then turn to the north (back under the room above) and enter the basement area.

View: Standing in the center of the east fireplace room and looking up to the ceiling one sees the second, more elaborate, chandelier which is the companion to the one in the west room (stage area). These two chandeliers were handcrafted by the tie hacks who built the Union Pacific Athletic Club and are original to the building. Also shown in close detail, starting at the left lower corner of the photo, are the east wall, and at the right lower corner may be seen the south wall, both joining the ceiling which is clearly seen in the upper portion of the photo.
