are filled with fine crystal, silver and linens. Even such things as small watches of the period are found in drawers and the book case is full of books.

The property on which the house stands has several large elm trees, oak trees, z maple, linden, and interesting walkways through the garden. A curved red brick drive connects the street with a porte-cochere at the house and continues in a graceful curve to a carriage house at the rear of the lot. The carriage \neg house is in the same restrained style of the house. It contains such interest-z ing things as a turntable on which an early electric car was parked and turned caround. In the rear yard stands an octagonal gazebo with walls of decorative lath work, characteristic of the times. Though some of the original property was sold, the house and grounds still enjoy a separation and separate identity \neg from their more recent neighbors.

All in all the Warkentin House and grounds is a complete and integrated example of the way of life for which it was built. One of very few still remaining in anything like their original form and condition. 1
