STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

For a time in its prehistory, southern Wisconsin was occupied by a group of Indians whose peculiar practice of building low earthworks, three to four feet high, in conical and linear forms and in the forms of birds and a variety of animals, led to their identification as the Effigy Mound culture. The activities of this group in mound building were limited almost exclusively to the southern half of Wisconsin except for a slight northward extension in the very western part of the state. Effigy mounds are also found in narrow strips of southeastern Minnesota, northeastern Iowa and extreme northern Illinois, all immediately adjacent to Wisconsin.

The Effigy Mounds were used for burials but usually limited to the remains of one or two individuals, though some mounds were as long as 250 feet or so. From excavations, archaeologists have learned something of the life of this prehistoric Indian group. Most of their tools and weapons were bone, wood or stone and occasionally copper. They lived in small bands and fished, hunted and gardened for food.

Although the number of known Effigy Mounds in Wisconsin exceeds 5,000, the group of 31 in Lizard Mound State Park is probably one of the finest in the entire area occupied by the Effigy Mound culture. The mounds in this small park are what remains of an original grouping of at least 47 which were counted in 1883, of which many were destroyed when settlers cultivated the land. The park is named for its most outstanding mound. It is believed that such an excellent grouping of outstanding works of a prehistoric culture qualifies the site for inclusion in the National Register.
