Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

Located just north of Colorado College and about a mile north of downtown Colorado Springs, the North End Historic Residential District is a residential area composed of 657 properties dating primarily from the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Despite the presence of 19 intrusions, mostly low-rise commercial structures or apartment houses, the district maintains the feelings and ambience of a bygone era.

The neighborhood is laid out in a standard city block grid plan; curving streets adjoining Monument Valley Park are the only exceptions to this pattern. The houses are typically single family, two-story detached residences, usually frame, with 25-foot setbacks on flat lawns, following the Midwestern or New England fashion. Original wall exteriors were usually square cut with overlapping shingles (combined frequently with ornamental shingles set in patterns) or wood lap siding some of which has been covered with asbestos or vinyl shingles or siding. There are a few residences of brick and stucco, but no stone structures.

The general tone is conservative and derivative. Because most of the houses were built at the turn of the century or later, there are few examples of flamboyant Victorian architecture. Yet the area has enjoyed stability and general affluence over the years and there is an air of health, continuity, and cohesiveness about the neighborhood. Properties and landscaping have been maintained, and vigilant neighborhood attention to zoning has kept out most modern intrusions.

Exclusive of outbuildings, there are 657 structures on the same number of individually owned sites. Outbuildings on the older properties include barns converted to garages, occasional carriage houses that combined servants' quarters with stables/garages, and a few garden pavilions. Most hitching posts have been removed. Sidewalks and curbs are of concrete. There were some early brick streets but all are now covered with asphalt surfacing. A few period lamp standards remain on Cascade and Wood avenues; modern streetlights have been installed on Nevada Avenue and Tejon Street.

The district has a number of prominent features that distinguish it from other sections of the city. Notable are the wide main streets that run from north to south and the landscaped median strips along Cascade and Nevada avenues and parts of Wood. The North End also has an impressive collection of ornamental iron fences providing a good cross section of the styles once produced from the Hassell Iron Works, a local foundry. Native field sandstone from Austin Bluffs can be seen in many low walls, house foundations, and porch supports, Greenstone from Yount's quarry in Manitou was used on bungalows and chalets built in the early twentieth century. Decorative windows were also common in the neighborhood, and many houses display small panes in the English style as well as beveled, leaded, and colored glass, the latter often arranged pictorially. The larger houses built before 1920 usually had sleeping porches used by either family members or boarders under treatment for tuberculosis.

The overwhelming cultural influence on North End architecture is English, sometimes expressed through American Colonial adaptations. There is a considerable body of American vernacular building, including several "craftsman" homes and a large representation of bungalows.

Houses in the Spanish and Mission modes, usually of stucco, form a pleasant contrast to the English/American frame houses that predominate. An occasional chalet suggests Switzerland or Scandinavia, and France is represented by one or two vaguely provincial models. Most of these variations date from 1900 and later; the bulk of the early work is English, ranging from picturesque to classic, with seemingly endless combinations.

Georgian Square

The most common type in the North End, numbering one-hundred twenty-eight houses, the Georgian Squares (and a smaller version, the Georgian Cottage) share these characteristics: hipped roof, projecting eaves treated as boxed cornices decorated with shallow modillion braces, dormer windows with hipped roofs, balustrades at mid and ground levels, a front porch spanning the full house width with plain classic columns in support. Exterior material is usually wood lap siding, occasionally shingle. The general visual quality is formal and symmetrical, though entry doors are usually set off to the side--there is no central hall except in the largest homes. Entrances sometimes have three parts: side lights and a transom or fan light. Beveled glass is often used as decoration on front windows and doors, sometimes set in ornamental oval windows with exaggerated keystones. These homes are only occasionally attributed to architects; most are builder designs.

Colonial Revival

There are fifty-two houses in this category. They display a wide range of features and sometimes incorporate a "shingle" variation that is totally picturesque rather than classic. Many of these houses have gambrel roofs; most are two story and sometimes larger. Second stories occasionally project, as in medieval styles. Many of these houses have leaded glass or small-paned windows. The larger examples have tripartite doors with side and transom lights, and classic columns on porches or porticos.

Georgian, Neo-Classic

The eleven houses falling under these three labels are formal, symmetrical structures with hipped roofs and classic detailing.

Tudor-Elizabethan/Queen Anne/Jacobean:

Tudor-Elizabethan

There are approximately forty-seven buildings in these styles, some of them imposing timbered structures with overhangs and textured variations. Small-paned windows, often leaded, are typical. Modes 1920s versions often retain vestigial features: little turrets, applied timbers, rusticated brick or stone punctuating an otherwise smooth stucco facade. These homes usually have sharply pitched gables and are distinguished by asymmetrical plans and massing.

Queen Anne

The North End was built too late to have many examples of this type: the nine that have been identified are modest, conservative homes that could also be considered vernacular. These houses are usually shingle, sometimes with several patterns. Invariably, they have towers or turrets, and an irregular massing of features.

Jacobean

This large brick residence is described in Item 8 in the section on architecturally significant homes.

Bungalow/Chalet

Bungalow

One-story timber bungalows, shingled or stuccoed, predominate in the north section of the district reflecting growth after World War I. These structures usually have a low-pitched gable roof, exposed rafters under the eaves, a front porch, window groupings, and fireplaces. They often feature "rustic" details such as timber braces, small paned windows, field stone foundations, and porch supports. There are larger versions, some of which blend into a chalet style. There are over a hundred examples.

Craftsman Chalet

There are over fifty homes that show evidence of craftsman influences from the Gustave Stickley era. About a dozen are chalets; individually crafted, picturesque homes probably done by the same builder. They have projecting eaves with exposed rafters, shingle siding, interior timbers on the dining and living room ceilings. Invariably the foundations and porches are done with Yount's greenstone. These homes were built from 1905 to 1915. A few have an irregular plan but there is a strong sense of symmetry and balance.

Spanish-Mission

These pleasant houses include several large mansions as well as extremely modest bungalows. Many have curvilinear gables, exteriors of white stucco, red tile roofs, decorative quatrefoil windows, round arch entries and fenestration. Their general aspect is horizontal, private, and restrained. Spanish motifs were used from 1900 well into the 1930s. The later Colonial models sometimes have decorative entries and parapets.

Vernacular

The North End has over one-hundred and fifty frame homes, ranging from small one story to rambling 2½ story. Originally of shingle or lap siding, some are now covered with vinyl shingles or with stucco. Typically these homes were built with a gable end toward the street, a large porch, and details that are classic, picturesque, or a combination. Some of these modest homes are without any exterior decoration. Taken together, they impart a vaguely Victorian look and some retain the characteristic detailing of that era: ornamental shingles, turned posts, decorative windows, brackets, spindles, sawn-wood trim, as well as special features such as towers, bays, and verandahs. A number are simple cottages with hipped roofs or gable ends that represent the most modest of carpenter-built homes.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

As a neighborhood, the North End contains the finest collection of turn-of-the-century residential architecture in Colorado Springs. Represented are varying styles, popular in the period, such as Georgian Revival, Mission, Spanish Colonial Revival and Bungalow. Some of the houses were designed by Thomas MacLaren, a major architect in Colorado Springs during this era. The district also has historic interest in that many of its original or early residents composed the managerial and professional element of Cripple Creek, a mining town just west of Colorado Springs, during the gold boom of the late 19th and early 20th centuries. They included the brokers, mine owners, managers, engineers, attorneys, realtors, bankers, and merchants, who prospered as a result of the mining boom. In addition, the area came to serve as an enclave of the city's cultural elite because of its nearness to Colorado College and its proximity to the town's major churches.

Beginning in 1871, both business and residential development occurred in the present downtown area of Colorado Springs, with the swells clustered on Weber Street around the impressive homes of Irving Howbert, William S. Jackson, the Tom Parishes, and, a bit later, W. S. Stratton. The tree plantings were watered by ditches coming down from the north from Monument Creek and by wells supplying domestic water. Early in the 1880s, prominent people such as Judge Horace Lunt began to move to the 400 block of North Nevada, North Tejon, and North Cascade, a move that coincided with General William Jackson Palmer's support of Colorado College. During this time, in 1881, President Tenney of the college bought as a speculative venture 820 acres of land just north of the campus. Although Tenney's enterprise went broke, it could be said to denote the historic beginnings of the North End development.¹

Around 1888, a shortage of well water in the downtown area encouraged some of the more prominent residents such as Joel Hayes (his wife was the daughter of Jefferson Davis) to build homes on the edge of the college campus, where well water was still available. Other wealthy residents, such as John Shields and Louis Ehrich--the New York art collector--began building large residences on North Cascade. In 1888 Glockner Sanitarium (now Penrose Hospital) was constructed near the 2000 block of North Cascade, further encouraging the growth of the already large health-seeking population in the North End. Dr. Gerald Webb, nationally known tuberculosis specialist, lived at 1222 North Cascade, with one of his patients, Constance Pulitzer, daughter of Joseph Pulitzer, residing across the street. Chester Alan Arthur, son of the United States president, lived at 1106 North Nevada. Near Arthur was the house of Edgar Ensign, a leading conservationist of the period. In close proximity to Ensign lived Horace Carlton, father of A. E. Carlton, on his way to becoming the "king" of Cripple Creek.

¹Tenney's land was called North Massachusetts and a portion of it later became part of Edwards Addition and D. Russ Wood Addition.

In addition to the presence of Colorado College and Glockner Sanitarium, and the water situation, the slow movement northward of the wealthier class can also be ascribed to the attractiveness of the terrain of the North End—land rising very gradually, flat with plenty of trees, wide streets, space for barns and, after 1890, a good streetcar system. The soil was gravel, but it was not difficult to overlay it with good soil for lawns and gardens. By contrast, the movement of residents south was restricted by congestion; movement west by Monument-Fountain Creek; and movement eastward by the wayward Shooks Run.

From 1888 on, many houses were erected north of the college. Nothing had yet appeared on the D. Russ Wood Addition. However, it was about this time that Charles Bennett took over the development of the Wood Addition. When Cripple Creek boomed in the 1890s development began along the entire street, with numerous Cripple Creek millionaires building grand houses on what was called "Millionaires Row," (which extended from Wood Avenue to Columbia). The residents composed the who's who of Cripple Creek--such as Jimmie Burns, Bert Carlton, Gene Shove, Percy Hagerman, Clarence Hamlin, and others.

The popularity of the North End received competition from the development of the Broadmoor by Spencer Penrose after 1918. During the Depression era, the neighborhood also experienced a difficult time, as houses sold at great losses. However, the North End saw a rejuvenation during the 1940s when Fort Carson, a U.S. Army military base, was completed south of the city. Another "boom" occurred in the 1960s. Today the neighborhood remains healthy, as more people feel inclined to live nearer the downtown area.

As a rapidly growing turn-of-the-century neighborhood, the North End reflects the building styles of the period--a highly eclectic assortment of pattern-book houses. But as a showpiece of the city's elite, it also exhibits individual examples of architectural design. The Denver architect Frederick Sterner contributed several designs to the North End, and one is attributed to Frank Edbrooke --the handsome shingle style house of Jerome Wheeler on North Cascade. Local architects added further to the distinguished designs: Barber and Hastings, Douglas and Heatherington, Charles Thomas, and E.C.G. Robinson. Nicholas Van den Ahrend drew plans for Arthur Sharp's elegant Jacobean mansion on North Cascade. But none had the impact of Thomas MacLaren, a Colorado Springs architect of Scottish birth who came west in the 1890s to seek treatment for tuberculosis. During the next thirty years MacLaren designed over 150 buildings including the major institutional structures of the Pikes Peak region. His dozen homes in the North End reflect his eclectic tastes and formal training; he was a superb draftsman and exhibited a graceful sense of proportion. His North End styles include Spanish Colonial Revival, Mission, Tudor/Elizabethan, and Colonial Revival.

North End Historic Residential District

Continuation sheet EL PASO COUNTY

Item number 10

Page 2

Justification:

South

The southern boundary is defined as the land area on the north side of Uintah Street from the rear property line of Building 612 to the alley between Nevada Avenue and Weber Street on the east. The land on the south side of Uintah Street is owned by Colorado College and is used for housing and parking.

West

The western boundary is formed by properties on the west side of Wood. Further west on Culebra and Alamo are a considerable number of 1940s and 1950s "ranch style" housing stock.

North

The northern boundary is formed primarily by Madison Street. Penrose Hospital, taking up several square blocks for buildings and parking, creates a barrier along the northern edge. There are clusters of strong, older homes north of the Hospital, but visually and in terms of land use, the hospital complex disturbs a continuity that existed prior to 1950.

East

The eastern boundary is the alley between Nevada Avenue and Weber Street, running from Madison Street on the north of Uintah Street on the south. The northern end of Weber Street has heavy commercial development including new construction as well as conversions. Historically, Weber is not as strongly identified with the North End, even though its residences date back to the same period of development. The buildings are smaller, with fewer elements of high style design. Weber Street lacks the hallmark median strip which all major north/south streets in the North End enjoy (with the exception of Tejon Street, which originally had a trolley line).

Description:

See Map #1

Beginning on the north side of Uintah at the SW corner of Building 612, the boundary extends northward to the south side of El Parque, following the rear property lines of lots fronting on Wood; turning eastward, the line extends to the east side of Wood; extending northward along the east side of Wood to the south side of Jefferson; turning eastward, it extends to the NE corner of property at 518 Jefferson; turning northward, it extends to the south side of Madison; turning eastward, it extends along the south side of Madison to the alley between Nevada and Weber. The line then turns southward, running along the west side of the alley and extending to the north side of Uintah Street. The boundary then turns westward, running along the north side of Uintah to the rear property line of Building 612 and the point of beginning.
