Narrative Description

The Manager's House for Glenwild Plantation is located on the southern edge of the town of Grenada, Grenada County, Mississippi. The Manager's House is the only remaining residence associated with Glenwild Plantation.

Grenada is located in North Central Mississippi, and the Glenwild Plantation Manger's House, once located in the country, is now located on the southern edge of Grenada. It was constructed in 1920, as a part of the Glenwild Plantation complex, including the main residence and polo barns.

The Glenwild Plantation Manager's House is a two-story, frame house with a side-gabled roof and a gabled projection off the north side, built in the Colonial Revival style. The original structure had a detached carriage house on the west end, connected by a breeze way. This breeze way has been enclosed, and the carriage house converted into a family room. The west end of the front porch has also been enclosed to make a sunroom.

The foundation of the house is brick infilled with concrete blocks, and the siding consists of clapboard and brick. There are also two interior brick chimneys. The roof is covered with red clay tiles. The south facade is dominated by a front-facing gable with the entrance located underneath. The entrance is a multi-light door, with side-lights. Windows are placed symmetrically on either side. The windows are 6/9, double-hung sash on the first floor, and 6/6, double-hung sash on the second floor, all with wood frames.

The east elevation has tripartite 6/6, double hung sash windows on the first floor, and a single, 6/6 double hung sash window on the second floor. There is also a decorative, circular vent in the gable end.

The north elevation has a projecting gable with a porte-cochere extension off the wing. This north elevation of the kitchen and the enclosed breezeway is sided in brick. The carriage house doors are still in place on the clapboard sided carriage house.

Between the house and the carriage house, on the south side, is the wooden cistern with a decorative tin roof. It rests on a poured concrete foundation.

The use of the interior space has changed, but none of this has affected the original floor plan of the house. The front entrance is no longer the primary entrance, and the foyer has been converted to office space. Upstairs, the only change is a closet that has been converted into a bathroom for the master bedroom.

The Glenwild Plantation Manager's House retains a fairly high degree of interior architectural details including several mantelpieces and the curved stairs. The floors throughout the house are wood. The interior doors are original. The living room is paneled in wood.

Overall, the Glenwild Plantation Manager's House is an excellent example of a fairly ornate Colonial Revival House. Even though the house has undergone some alterations, its location, materials, dimensions and fell have remained intact, thus qualifying it for National Register listing.

Statement of Significance

The Glenwild Plantation Manager's House is significant under Criterion A for Architecture as a good example of the Colonial Revival style. The house is the only remaining residence associated with Glenwild Plantation. There are still several barns, including the elaborate polo barn complex, left from the plantation, but the main house burned in 1943.

The Manager's House was built in 1920 by John Borden, a Chicago Millionaire. He originally visited Grenada at the invitation of some friends, and enjoyed the hunting so much, he decided to build a home there. He purchased 6,000 acres south of Grenada, and built a main residence in the model of Mount Vernon at a cost of approximately 1.5 million.

Glenwild Plantation was completely self-sufficient with its own water supply, electric generator, ice plant, cotton gin and many tenant houses. All of the buildings on the plantation were white with red tile roofs and green shutters. Borden even had his own railroad depot at Glenwild. Borden's second wife received Glenwild in the divorce settlement in 1933. The plantation was purchased in 1939, the same time Camp McCain began construction, and half of the plantation was taken by the federal government. The main house burned to the ground in 1943, and the only remaining structures of this grand estate are the polo barns and the Manager's House.

Architecturally, the house is a good example of the Colonial Revival style, with its form, entrance, and windows. The red tile roof remains perfectly intact. There have been some changes to the exterior, but the interior remains remarkably intact. The fireplaces all have their original mantelpieces, and the living room fireplace has its original tiles. The wood floors throughout remain, as well as the curved stairs. Thus, the Glenwild Plantation Manager's House is locally significant under Criterion C as a good example of a Colonial Revival House.
