STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Located upriver some 2<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub> miles above the Vieux Carre, or original city of New Orleans, Lafayette City once boasted the fastest-growing economy on the river, being the terminus of the Texas cattle trail, and the center of the grain traffic in the Deep South of the Mississippi Valley. Once known as the de Livaudais plantation, its sugar fields were divided into streets and lots when the city was incorporated in 1833, and the square bounded by Washington Ave., Prytania, Coliseum and Sixth Streets was reserved for a cemetery. It was named Lafayette Cemetery No. 1, and immediately began to receive burials according to ordinances and resolutions of the City of Lafayette Board of Council, August 3, 1833 (see copy attached). However, according to Edward Rightor in his "Standard Wistory of New Orleans", it had been a place designated for burials in 1824. The "New Orleans City Guide" states that it is "the oldest planned cemetery in New Orleans, the lanes being laid out in symmetrical order and provision made for driveways for funeral processions... "When Lafayette City merged with the City of New Orleans in 1852, the cemetery became the property of that city, as part of the 4th Municipal District. It is still the property of the city of New Orleans, although its tombs and plots are under private ownership. The city maintains only the walls, walks, grounds, gates, and trees.

Its historical significance, besides being a prime example of a typical New Orleans, above-ground cemetery serving a very historical area, is enhanced by its being the resting place of a great many of New Orleans' colorful/and prominent citizens and their families. Here lie Samuel J. Peters, to whom much credit is due for the gity's public school system as well as a developer of the city; John Turpín, the architectural partner of James Gallier, Jr., one of the great Greek Revival specialists, whose works are internationally famous; E. W. Sewell and Robert Huyghe, who built many of the great houses and mansions of the Garden District, the magnificent ante-bellum homes which surround the area in which the cemetery is located. Henry W. Allen, another educational devotee in early New Orleans and later Governor of the state was buried there, although his body was later/removed to Baton Rouge. Buried there are Generals John B. Hood and Harry Hays, Confederate heroes; numerous fraternal organizations, including the famous Defferson Volunteer Fire tomb, with its interesting marble pediment showing the hand-pump engine of the period.

Large community burials took place here in the great yellow fever epidemics, including numerous German and Irish settlers of the 1830's and '40's. The International Order of Jefferson Lodge No. 29 is represented by an obelisk of white marble, erected in 1849. An Italian marble tomb for Oscar Wibel was erected in 1864, during the war, for $3,500, quite a sum in those days, the cost of a fine house. The complete record books of the Lafayette Cemetery No. 1 are on deposit in the New Orleans Public Library, and afford an interesting view of the city's storied part. The original design for the cemetery was done by Benjamin Buisson, himself an historic and colorful figure, having been one of Napoleon's engineers who fled to America after Waterloo. He settled in New Orleans and became Surveyor for Jefferson Parish, in which Lafayette City was located until 1852.

Lafayette Cemetery No. 1 is included, and has been so, for over a century, in routine sightseeing tours as one of New Orleans' interesting and historic sites. And yet, it is still used by many of the city's families of high and low estate, for family burials.
