Constructed in 1819, this church occupies the site of the older parish church of St. Thomas, which was built about 1706 but which burned in 1815.

During the Reconstruction period, the church was the scene of the 1876 "Cainhoy Massacre," a serious riot between whites and blacks which developed when some white men from Charleston journeyed to Cainhoy to attend a Negro Republican meeting. The Negroes fired upon the whites with guns they had hidden in a vault at St. Thomas churchyard.

The church, charming in its simplicity of design, is a uniquely beautiful example of a small, rural parish church of the early 1800's. An unusual and distinctive auxiliary building is the vestry, with hipped roof on one end and chimney on the other, giving the appearance of a half-completed building.
