Camp Breckinridge Non-Commissioned Officers' Club (UN-M-33) is part of the historic Camp Breckinridge. Initial plans for the Camp called for 50,000 acres; however, approximately 36,000 were purchased and developed for the facility. Plans for construction of Camp Breckinridge were begun in Washington, D.C., in August 1941. Construction began in February 1942 and essentially complete in five-and-one-half months. The first of the cream-colored frame structures (approximately 3,500 buildings) constructed included hospital facilities, barracks, mess halls, warehouses, and office buildings, to be followed by chapels, service clubs, theaters, recreation halls, and post exchanges. There were 24 post exchanges (general stores for soldiers), 10 non-denominational chapels, five theaters, three Service Clubs, three guesthouses and a field house or gymnasium large enough to enable the playing of three basketball games simultaneously. Of the three service clubs built, there was only one NCO Club constructed. As any large city, the Camp had a spacious hospital (132 buildings with maximum bed capacity of 2,635), bakery, laundry, incinerator, cold storage plant, motor repair shops, sewage disposal plant, five fire stations, all utilities, paved roads and sidewalks, and other facilities. Today, there are a few remaining original buildings. Many sites have only a chimney left standing. The largest number of original buildings being used today are on the Earle C. Clements Job Corps Training site, owned by the Department of Labor and operated by Res-Care. As money is available, the buildings in the worst state of repair are being torn down and replaced. Other original structures outside the Job Corps site are being used for manufacturing, storage, and housing.

Non-Commissioned Officers' Club

The approximately 14,500 square foot building faces south along Village Drive and is sited on a hill in front of a reservoir that was constructed as part of the military base in 1942. The building features a large dance hall with a balcony and murals painted by German Prisoners of War. A total of 34 murals in various sizes remain on the walls of the Club. The largest mural is 162 inches by 369 inches, and the smallest mural is 39 inches by 37 inches. The paintings were painted directly onto pre-primed plywood supports using oil-based paint and were laid out using a square grid for a transfer system of pre-determined designs (similar to postcard images). The murals remaining on the walls are on the main and balcony of the dance hall and in the museum (east wing). Two pictures are on display in the arts center (west wing) that were removed from that area and returned. The paintings on the first floor of the dance hall have been painted around the doors. The second floor paintings have ribbon-like, diamond-shaped painted borders.

The two-story, T-shaped structure is constructed primarily of wood. Concrete piers were used for the foundation of the structure, and there is an open crawl space. Wood floor girders and floor joists support the wood decking.

The large, forty-foot roof spans were accomplished with columns and trusses "built-up" of large lumber members. Wood joists span these with tongue and groove wood planks used for decking. The original built-up asphalt roofing system was replaced with an insulated single-ply membrane roof. Asphalt shingles cover the eyebrow and entrance canopies around the building.

The exterior walls are comprised of wood studs and wood siding. Double hung wood windows are spaced between the built-up wood columns. Clerestory windows above provide light deep into the wide spaces. The clerestory windows in the dance hall were top hinged and ropes and pulley were used to open the windows and allow ventilation of the hall.

The interior finishes include painted plywood and drywall on the walls and ceilings, horizontal wood plank wainscoting, and maple wood flooring. Paneled wood doors were used throughout.

Brick was used for the boiler chimney and the stacked double fireplace prominently featured in the dance hall and balcony.

The concrete "bandstand" and outdoor patio are still intact behind the former kitchen.

From 1962 until 1998, the building was privately-owned and used for dance and exercise classes, parties, etc. Also, the second floor enclosed-area was converted into an apartment. Over the years, windows were broken out and not replaced; birds nested and flew in and out of the building – leaving droppings. The roof leaked in several areas – damaging some of the murals. In general, little maintenance was done on the building. The Union County Fiscal Court purchased the building 1998, and restoration work was completed in 1999. A new roof, electrical wiring, central heat and air conditioning, and window replacements were some of the major items in the project. A new catering kitchen was installed in the old concession area. The interior second floor apartment area was open up for a small conference room, with cabinetry left in place and bathroom reworked. To maintain the integrity of the design and building, the Kentucky Heritage Council was consulted.

The area immediately around the NCO Club is largely a residential area. A large reservoir behind the Club was built during construction of the Camp. It now serves the City of Morganfield. The Water Treatment facility east of the Club was built in 1942, and it now owned and operated by the City of Morganfield. There are a couple of the original Camp structures near the Club but are privately-owned.

Narrative Statement of Significance

The Camp Breckinridge Officers' Club (UN-M-33) meets the National Register Criterion A and is significant within the historical context of the Military History from 1940 – 1950 for Union County, Kentucky. The Officers Club is an important indicator of World War II military base facilities construction. What made Camp Breckinridge meaningful during World War II was the fact that activities at Camp Breckinridge supported the war effort worldwide. Troops trained at the Camp were dispatched out in whole units, along with support personnel, to the European and Pacific theaters of war. The Camp was home of the famous 101st Airborne Division during the Korean Conflict. Camp Breckinridge has made vital economic and social impacts from its inception in 1941 – local employment, cultural diversity in a rural and agricultural-dependent area, infrastructure creation, prominence in military activities, and local landowners (negative and positive).

Military History from 1940-1950 – Union County, Kentucky

Camp Breckinridge was named after John Cabell Breckinridge, one of Kentucky's outstanding statesmen of the 19th century. At 35, he was the youngest man ever to serve as Vice-President of the United States and who later became famous as a Military Commander in the War Between the States.

The speed with which Camp Breckinridge sprang into existence in 1942 stood as a tribute to Army and civilian engineers. Plans for the construction of Camp Breckinridge were begun at Washington, DC, in August 1941. The first construction work was started in February 1942, scarcely three months after the U.S. entered the Second World War. Through an around-the-clock work schedule for five-and-one-half months, all prime contracts had been filled. On July 1, 1942, the camp was activated and the first cadre men established headquarters in the brick schoolhouse of Boxville, a community taken over by the government as part of the military reservation. By September 1942, the 98th Division, which consisted of 15,000 troops, had moved in and headquarters was relocated in new administrative buildings.

The Camp area consisted of 37,400 acres out of Union, Henderson and Webster Counties and covered 58 square miles in the extreme western part of Kentucky – 12 miles from the Ohio River, three miles from Morganfield, 24 miles from Henderson and 33 miles from Evansville. This entirely modern Army camp (1942) was designed for infantry training. The land acquisition for the camp cost $3.1 million (approximately $86.00 per acre) in 1941. This price compensated the owner for their oil and mineral rights. Many landowners were promised they could buy back their property for the purchase price if the government abandoned the Camp. Construction cost of the camp was around $35.5 million. In 1962, the cost to replace the camp was estimated at $132 million.

The first of the cream-colored frame structures (approximately 3,500 buildings) constructed included hospital facilities, barracks, mess halls, warehouses, and office buildings, to be followed by chapels, service clubs, theaters, recreation halls, and post exchanges. There were 24 post exchanges (general stores for soldiers), 10 non-denominational chapels, five theaters, three Service Clubs, three guesthouses and a field house or gymnasium large enough to enable the playing of three basketball games simultaneously. As any large city, the Camp had a spacious hospital (132 buildings with maximum bed capacity of 2,635), bakery, laundry, incinerator, cold storage plant, motor repair shops, sewage disposal plant, five fire stations, all utilities, paved roads and sidewalks, and other facilities. With work conducted around the clock, it is not an exaggeration to say Camp Breckinridge was a city that never slept.

Effects of Camp Breckinridge on Local Area

The construction, maintenance and staffing of Camp Breckinridge had a rippling effect through the local economy. Five local attorneys were retained to research deeds for the condemnation proceedings to purchase property for the Camp. An estimated 10,000 – 12,000 workers were used to construct the Camp. Civilian and Army personnel supervised the construction. Struck Construction Company from Louisville, Kentucky was the general contractor for the project.

Because the Camp constructed and maintained much of the infrastructure, the area benefited from having new water, sewer, and recreation facilities and updated rail, highway, communication, electrical, gas, truck, and other transportation services. The telephone service was owned by Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company and operated by the U.S. Army. Illinois Central Railroad provided rail service with 6.5 miles of rail on the installation. The Camp built a reservoir and sold raw water to the City of Morganfield; the City now owns the reservoir and water and sewer facilities. Taxi and bus services were provided so individuals could travel to Henderson, Evansville, etc. Because of the lack of base housing, many area residents rented rooms, houses, garages, outbuildings, etc. to wives and families of the soldiers.

The former USO Club in Morganfield is now the City's Municipal Building – purchased by the City for $8,000. A 9-hole golf course was built (later expanded to 18 holes). The Army leased the course in 1953 to the Breckinridge Golf Club for $25 per year. By 1960, the course was jointly maintained by the Golf Club and the Army. Civilians were hired to work at the Camp in various jobs and had access to the facilities. Today, the 18-hole course is solely owned and maintained by the Golf Club.

Out leasing of land for agricultural uses existed from the time of the land acquisition in 1942 until the Camp's surplus in 1962. During active use of the Camp, the leases were restricted to small tracts. During inactive periods, all tillable and grazing land was made available for lease. A number of leases were paid by mowing grass, preparing firebreaks, etc. for the installation.

The social impact on this largely agricultural community was from the tremendous influx of people from all over the United States, as well as the German Prisoners of War. In 1940, Union County's population was 17,411 – Morganfield 3,057; Sturgis 2,321; Uniontown 1,327; and Waverly 323. Consequently, the Camp's capacity of 30,000 troops nearly tripled the population during this time period and ballooned the daily traffic in and around the county. Some soldiers married local people; some brought their families to the area to live during their stay at the Camp. Area residents were invited to many of the events at the Camp clubs and recreational facilities. In return, many residents invited soldiers to their homes. Soldiers were allowed to travel throughout the local area. The area was exposed to cultural diversity it would not have experienced had it not been for Camp Breckinridge.

National, State and Local Significance

Many army units, which included the 101st, 98th, 92nd, 83rd, 75th, and 35th trained at the Camp during World War II and the Korean War. These units had support battalions attached to them and were assigned to the Camp. The various units transitioned through from 1942 to 1946. The camp was reactivated from 1948 to 1949 and again in 1950 to 1954 for the 101st Airborne Division.

The U.S. Army reported Camp Breckinridge as excess property on October 2, 1962; and General Services Administration received notice on December 5, 1962 to surplus the property. Many former property owners were disillusioned that the property was put up for public auction and the oil and mineral rights were not included in the transfer. The City of Morganfield and individuals purchased the surplus property. A portion of the land was retained by the U.S. Department of Labor to be used for the Earle C. Clements Job Corps Training Center.

It is estimated that over 500,000 U.S. Army personnel passed through the camp. Two soldiers received national recognition for their talents in other fields – baseball great Jackie Robinson and U.S. Senator Robert Dole. Both men were at Camp Breckinridge during 1944. The Camp also housed as many as 3,000 WWII German Prisoners of War. From 1943 to 1945, German Prisoners of War were made to earn their bread and board and were used to make up for the lack of men available for farm work in the area. Also, some POWs were retained by the Camp for skilled technical jobs.

Camp Breckinridge NCO Club
Union County, Kentucky

The Non-Commissioned Officers Club serves as a reminder of the impact that Camp Breckinridge had on Union County from 1940-1950. The building has valuable historical (military and civilian), economic and tourism significance to the nation, state and county. The Club is part of Union County's history that linked this part of Kentucky to worldwide events during World War II and the Korean War. The letters and artifacts that have been sent to the Club since the completion of the restoration work has added strength to the county's conviction that Camp Breckinridge was a historically significant facility for the area and preserving a major remnant of that era was not only the right thing to do but the proper way to remember those that served their countries as military personnel and civilians. The current use of the Officers' Club demonstrates the strong association the building today has with the entire operation the Camp represents.

One of the last remaining major and public remnants of this decade (1940-1950) of Union County's military history is the Non-Commissioned Officers Club building. The building was sold to an individual and remained in private ownership until March 1998. The county bought the building to preserve the murals painted by German POWs, provide an area facility for a museum to display the county's military history and house an arts center. Extensive restoration has been done on the building under guidance of the Kentucky Heritage Council; and preservation work has been done on the murals. The county has spent over $1.4 million to preserve and protect the facility and murals for future generations. Because of the local impact and national historical significance of Camp Breckinridge, it is important to Union County that restoration and preservation of the Club be recognized, and the building should be listed on the National Register of Historic Places.
