DESCRIBE THE PR	RESENT AND ORIGINAL (If kn	OWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Humphrey Pratt Tavern is a very handsome house of large proportions and carefully executed design. Built in the less common central hallway form with twin end chimneys, it exhibits the usual nine-window facade and traditional Connecticut style hewn overhang across the facade and at the gable ends. (Window sash is the expected twelve over twelve on the first floor, eight over twelve on the second, and smaller six over six at attic level, with one small two over four pane window for ventilation in the crawl space above. The louvered shutters are a later addition. The eaves of the roof show a small box cornice, which, at gable ends suggests the beginnings of a return connice just above the second story overhang. The entry portico may well represent later work, being somewhat Greek in style with a wide frieze and columns with recessed panels and modest capitals. The door is multi-paneled and has a five-pane overlight. Shutters here are also inappropriate.

To the rear is a large two-story gambrel-roofed ell housing a ballroom with arched ceiling and a floor said to be of sprung construction. There is a kitchen on the first floor. Windows in the ell are unevenly spaced and do not fall in line from one story to another. Sash is nine over nine on the first floor and twelve over twelve on the second. A one-story wing sits to the south side of the ell, being run off the rear of the house proper. It could not be seen clearly because of foliage. There is a small bay window on the south side of the main part of the house, the only obvious late 19th century feature. All else is homogeneous with the late 18th century.

The grandeur of the house is enhanced by its wood-shingled roof and a stone foundation laid with very little mortar. It is an impressive building, located just below the business section of Old Saybrook's Main Street, in a concentration of 18th century homes, still used as residences, which are rapidly being encroached upon by commercial ventures.

Built in 1785 by Humphrey Pratt, this building remained in the Pratt family until 1943. Its integrity has survived despite its use as a residence, post office, and tavern and inn. The first post office in the town was in the house, for in 1793, Humphrey Pratt was appointed Old Saybrook's first postmaster.

The central location, at the junction of the Boston Post Road and Main Street, gave rise to its useeas a gathering place; in the Connecticut Gazette of July 8, 1801, it is reported that "the citizens repaired to the house of Mr. H. Pratt where a large assembly of gentlemen and ladies partook of social repast prepared for the occasion." Its strategic location gave rise, too, to its use as a stage stop on the run from New York to Boston. A favorite local tradition is that General Lafayette spent a night in the inn-taverm in 1824 and a dance was held in his honor. The ballroom did have frequent use, for an Ordination Ball was held there for the installation of each new minister.

Because this is a locally significant house historically and a rather distinguished building architecturally, it is important that it be preserved. There are those in the town who are working very hard for this southern end of Main Street, but it is unfortunately being crowded by shops and businesses.
