Trump-Lilly Farmstead
Raleigh/Summers
Counties, WVA

The Trump-Lilly Farmstead is a 202-acre former farm located on the bench level of the east side of Sewell Mountain, overlooking the New River, within the boundary of New River Gorge National River. The property slopes downward from the ridge line of Sewell Mountain; the central section has a slight to moderate slope, while the extreme eastern and western portions have a steep slope. The maximum elevation on the property is approximately 3,000 feet. About 30% of the property is open pasture land, and about 65% percent is woodland, with a moderate stand of hardwoods.

(The farm is accessed by a one-lane dirt and gravel road [State Secondary Route 26/3], which joins Route 26 at Brooklin, approximately 2.5 miles away. The road follows its original nineteenth century course through landscapes which have changed little since the nineteenth century. However, as this access road is not NPS property and not within the Park Boundary, it is not included in the nomination.)

The main house is a typical two-story southern farmhouse with a side-gabled roof. The roof was originally covered with wooden shakes, though at present it is overlaid with rolled asphalt roofing. A single well-constructed sandstone chimney is laid up against the northwest gabled wall. The farmhouse is one room deep, divided into two rooms downstairs and two rooms upstairs. An attached one-room, single-story kitchen is located off the southeast side of the house. Open porches are attached to both sides of the kitchen. The house is constructed of squared chestnut logs with half-dovetail corner notching. Presently the house is covered with poplar clapboard siding. The house has been sided twice, most recently in 1934. The sill logs rest on low drylaid stones randomly placed under the sills. There is a small cement block chimney flue in the kitchen which was constructed around World War I to replace a crumbling stone kitchen fireplace. The windows are irregularly placed. Double 6 x 6 sash windows are located on the first floor, while single 6 x 6 sash windows are located on the second floor. Two small 4 x 4 sash windows are located in the attic. Except for one pair of windows on the first floor, the house has original fenestration.

The farm yard is surrounded by a hand-riven oak picket fence. A vertical board shed is located northwest of the farmhouse. The shed was constructed around 1920 and served as a meat shed. Winter storage ground holes for apples and potatoes were located behind this structure. To the northwest of the house is a two-story granary built of squared chestnut logs with half-dovetail notching.

A spring house is located below the entrance road on the southeast side of the farmhouse. The spring house is in fair condition, needing some roof repairs. Adjacent to the spring house is a one-room board and batten shed constructed c. 1948. This structure served as a laundry shed. It is in good condition considering its light construction.

The main barn which housed the cattle and draft horses is located in the upper northwest field. The barn roof had collapsed due to the structural failure of the roof supports and top logs. During the spring of 1990 stored and rotted hay was removed, the log walls shored up, and the collapsed tin roof removed. A new tin roof on commercial trusses rests on new 8" X 8" posts that do not bear on any of the original logs. The sides of the barn have been straightened and held in place by 8"-diameter vertical posts that are cabled together, adding support to the walls of the structure. The building is now in stable condition.

The bank barn is similar in construction to the granary with room below the structure to shelter sheep. A round log sheep barn with saddle notching is located in the field directly below the farmhouse. The sheep barn is in fair condition, but the roof is sagging and in need of stabilization.

Both the upper and lower fields contain the remains of an apple orchard which originally yielded a dozen different varieties of apples. All of the farm fields are still enclosed with original worm chestnut rail, post and rail, and drylaid stone fencing.

The Trump-Lilly Farmstead qualifies for the National Register of Historic Places under (1) Criterion A, in that it is associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad pattern of history (American frontier agriculture and vernacular architecture in the Appalachian region); and (2) Criterion C, in that it represents a significant and distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction.

The Trump-Lilly Farmstead is a frontier Appalachian farm which has been little altered since its development. The farm exemplifies an Appalachian frontier farmstead, with more than ninety percent of its original historic fabric intact. All the buildings and fences are original with no major modifications. There are no structures which could be considered non-contributing. The main house has original fenestration except for one pair of windows on the first floor. The original shake roofing is still intact, although it is now overlaid by rolled asphalt roofing.

The farmstead is a third generation property division of the Richmond family who originally settled the area in the eighteenth century. Jim Richmond deeded the property to his daughter Mary Richmond who married Richard Trump in the early 1870s. Over the next one hundred years ownership of the farm passed to Naaman Lilly, George Bennett, and back into the Lilly family. Oba Lilly was the last family member to live on the farm. In 1973 he sold the farm to David Rosenberg, who in 1988 sold the property to the National Park Service, as a component of New River Gorge National River.

Given this succession of owners from the early 1870s to the present, it is remarkable that only two of the original structures no longer exist. Except for these two small sheds, all the original architecture is preserved.

Living descendants who resided on the farm have provided accurate documentation of the traditional farming practices and farm life. The field patterns remain as they were in the early period of the farm, the size and configuration unchanged. The upslope area above the access road was used as a wood lot where the family harvested the chestnut-oak forest. The fields above and below the apple orchard were rotated to grow hay and grain for the cattle, hogs, and draft horses. A farm garden, providing potatoes, onions, cabbage, beans, and turnips, was located adjacent to the present wash house. Plenty of small game was available to be added to the kitchen fare, such as rabbit, squirrel, and wild turkey.

The farm is one a few remaining southern West Virginia farmsteads which have not been adapted to modern farming. Although West Virginia's history has been dominated by small subsistence farms, very few remain with such historic integrity. Today the apple orchard still blooms as a reminder of the farm's subsistence heritage.

The farmstead has retained the original field and legal boundaries, and there are no modern visual intrusions nearby. The fields are delineated by original fencing, and the entire farm is accessed by a rural, dirt road. The historic landscape is intact and maintains its integrity. The Trump-Lilly Farmstead characterizes American frontier agriculture and architecture in the Appalachian region.

Period of Significance

The period of significance begins c. 1873 when the farmstead became a third generation property division of the Richmond family who originally settled in southern West Virginia in the eighteenth century. The farmstead was beginning to be developed when Jim Richmond deeded the property to his daughter Mary, who married Richard Trump in the early 1870s. Through the late 1930s a succession of families used the acreage for traditional farming practices and farm life, foregoing modern additions and adaptations. After this period the families diminished in size and the farm was never fully utilized as in the past. Although the laundry shed postdates the period of significance, it represents the later years of the farm's use, well prior to National Park Service ownership, and it is not out of character with the property.

Verbal Boundary Description

The Trump-Lilly Farmstead is an irregularly-shaped tract located in the Richmond District of Raleigh County, West Virginia. The property is located on both sides of State Secondary Route 26/3, approximately 2.5 miles from State Route 26. This tract is identified as 102-03, New River Gorge National River. The property is identified as Tax Map 18-30 and Tax Map 11-17, Richmond District, New River Hills. Although approximately 27 acres of the property appears to be located in the Jumping Branch District of Summers County, there is no assessment in Summers County listed under the present owner's name. The total area contained in this tract is approximately 202 acres.

Boundary Justification

The 202-acre Trump-Lilly Farmstead represents an intact cultural landscape enclosed within its original field and legal boundaries. The structures and fields are delineated by original fencing, and the entire farm is accessed by an original rural gravel road (the latter is not NPS property and is not included in the nomination).

The farmstead is a third generation property division of the Richmond family who originally settled the area in the 18th century. The boundaries of this farmstead encompass not only a surviving Appalachian subsistence farm but also the evolving social history of the region.
