STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Old Farm School is the oldest remaining public building in the town of Bloomfield. It was one of seven district schools voted to be built in 1795 and is the only one still standing. The first teacher was Hannah Latimer, daughter of Captain George Latimer. Records reveal that among later teachers were Joseph L. Barbour, a lawyer, and Smith W. Tolles, a Methodist minister. Among students at the Old Farm School was Mrs. Virginia Thrall Smith, a noted humanitarian in the Hartford area, who, in addition to working for the City Mission of Hartford and the Children's Aid Society, was instrumental in the founding of the Newington Children's Hospital. Linchell Smith, (1879-1933), critic and playwright, was her son.

The old school was leased from the town for 99 years by the American Legion in 1931, but they are now nearly inactive and ceased to occupy the building in 1971. Hans are now in the offing for a restoration of the school by the Eintonbury Historical Society. The interior is said to be in very good condition with the second floor in nearly its original state. In the second floor the Historical Society has discovered all but two of the old desks—the missing ones are now owned by one of the members of the Society who has promised to return them when they are needed. It was the Historical Society who boarded the windo's last November (1971) when they were broken and allowing the elements to do damage. The town is in favor of the plans for restoration and eventual use as a museum and it is hoped that the Historical Society will soon have a long term lease on the Old Farm School House, allowing it once again to be used.
