Located off County Route 3, is a small complex of buildings comprising the Lowther Store and its outbuildings. The store is perched on the side of a hill with the porch projecting to the edge of the road. Clustered close to the store are two contributing buildings including a frame coal house, and a storage building located across the roadway. A large beech tree stands near the shed, which is the site of a former mill house. A chain once tied around the tree has now become imbedded in the bark. In past years the chain as well as another post served as a hitching place for the horses.

The store is a one-story rectangular, wood-frame building roughly 34'-9" x 32'-2" in size, with a foundation of field stones and posts. The shape of the building suggests a hen and chick folk style with a center gable end, and shed wings to each side with metal roofing. The center porch area has a overhang supported by knee-bracing. There are steps leading up to the front entrance from the side. The front elevation has five front bays with a center five-panel door with transom, and 2/2 double-hung windows to each side. A single plank door leads into each of the side wings. On the windows are burglar-protection steel rods attached to the exterior of the main building which were installed in the early 1900s. Skylights have been added for extra illumination to the store.

The interior of the store has a central merchandise area with a side rear door opening into the ware room or storage area. The walls and ceiling have painted wooden boards, with a plank floor. A wood stove heats the space which has shelving for canned goods, videos, and an old fashioned glass counter and display case. The store was wired for electricity in 1948, but has no running water.

The original owner added a wing onto the south side of the building about 1910 which served as a jewelry store and repair shop. The only access is an entrance door from the front porch. The two window openings do not have security bars.

During the early years there were four outbuildings, all wood frame structures. Just across County Route 3 was a grist mill approximately 15' x 30' in size, which was operated each Saturday. To the north of the store was a well house constructed over a dug well, while to the south was an outdoor privy. Today, the oldest outbuilding is the coal house, a simple wood frame building with a small square opening off the road for unloading coal. The structure has a corrugated gable metal roof with a entrance door on the back side.

A feed shed was erected prior to 1941 opposite the store. This is a wood frame structure with insul-brick on three sides, that cantilevers over the hillside with an opening for cars, etc. on the lower level. The shed roof extends out in the front for an overhang, and paired center doors open for unloading. The building has single or paired square window openings. The mill building was removed from the property after the feed building was erected. Currently the feed building is used for storage.

The Lowther Store represents a place of commerce in a rural crossroads of Webster County. The vernacular architecture of the store provides an example of local carpentry work from the turn of the century. The setting and landscape are unchanged, and the complex retains its relationship of buildings.

The Lowther Store is significant under Criterion A for its long association with Commerce or Trade in Webster County since 1900. It is contributing under Criterion B for its link with the Hinkle family, both the first owner John A. Hinkle, and his son, Perry C. Hinkle. The period of significance is 1900 to 1946, which covers the first 46 years of the store's operation.

The Lowther Store is the oldest continuous operating business in Webster County, opening at the turn of the century. The store's first owner was John A. Hinkle who had the building constructed about 1900. It was built by local carpenter George Reuben Anderson (1877-1970), who was a relative of John's wife, Eliza Ann Anderson. The business was known as the "John A. Hinkle and Son Store". The business was one of the major country stores of the area during the early 1900s. They stocked yardage, clothing, shoes, hardware, feed, and groceries. People traveled by horse and foot for miles around to patronize the business.

For the first few years of operation George Reuben Anderson ran the store for Mr. Hinkle, who was involved in logging and lumbering in the area at the turn of the century. When the Wheeler Post Office was established within the building on May 26, 1903, Anderson was appointed postmaster. John A. Hinkle became postmaster on June 29, 1905, and served in that capacity until August 29, 1913.

John A. Hinkle was a prominent and well-respected man in Hacker Valley District. He served as Secretary of the Hacker Valley District Board of Education from 1904-1905. He was a member of the board from 1906 to 1908, then served as board president for another two years. In addition to these and other endeavors, Mr. Hinkle was also a jeweler with his shop being located in the right wing of the building.

On August 29, 1913, John's son, Perry C. Hinkle, became postmaster and served until the post office was discontinued on August 25, 1952. Throughout all those years, Perry ran the store in conjunction with the post office. After the death of Perry in 1960, Walter William Lowther (1912-1995), Perry's son-in-law, took over the operation. In 1993, Walter's son Max and his wife, Linda, assumed the management of the store.

Many of the original store furnishings are still in the building, either being used in the daily operation of the store, or for display. This includes such items as the early cash register, scales, twine-string holder, display cases, etc. The interior retains the simple wooden plank construction for the ceiling, walls, and floor. The central room is still heated by a wood stove, although skylights now add some extra light to the store.

Several outbuildings were added to the complex, which also includes a large Beech tree with chain which was once used as a hitching post for horses. As a place of commerce the store provided the sale of coal which necessitated the construction of a small frame building. While the store once provided a means of grinding grain, the mill was removed after the store began stocking feed around 1940. A small storage shed was erected across the road to hold the feed about this same time.
