(Describe the historic and current physical appearance and condition of the property. Describe contributing and noncontributing resources if applicable. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, type, style, method of construction, setting, size, and significant features. Summary Paragraph

The Zenas Aplington House, constructed in 1853, is a two-story, frame vernacular house with an Upright and Wing configuration and Greek Revival influences. The home faces Franklin Avenue in Polo, Illinois. It is located on its original site on a corner-lot in the center of a small rural city, one block from the historic business corridor.

Narrative Description

The building lot is grass-covered with minimal landscaping and surrounded by a modern wooden fence. A modern garage and ticket house, both not original to the site, are located in the yard behind the house. The two-car garage, located on the northwest corner of the lot, has a standing-seam, metal, gabled roof with white-painted, wood siding. The double-door entrance faces Locust Street. A window and a side door for human entry is on the east elevation. The ticket house is approximately 7' x 12' feet and located in the southwest corner of the lot. It is clapboard and has a hipped roof with asphalt shingles.

The home is comprised of two sections. A formal two-story front gable portion is situated on the north and a shorter one and a half story service wing extends to the south. A gracious porch, supported by wood columns, extends across the front of these elements, providing design continuity.

The home appears to have been added on to and grew over time. The foundations beneath the upright section is deeper, yielding a higher ceiling height. The basement beneath the wing section is shallower. Both have the same quarried stone on the exterior. Graphic representation on Sandborn maps indicate that the front and rear porch configurations also changed over time. The current porches are likely a late nineteenth century modification.

The home is clad in clapboard and the doors and windows are cased with wide wood trim. Similar wide trim exists as paneled corner boards and a trimmed frieze board is located just below the eaves. The windows and doors beneath the porch have casings that are embellished with ogee moldings and bull-nose trim. The home has generous eaves with ogee crown molding on the fascia. The fascia and trim are discontinuous across the gable end.

The windows are arranged in a regular pattern across the façade of both parts of the home. At the upright portion of the home, there are three on the second floor and related windows, at a larger scale on the main floor beneath. The windows on the east façade of the upright portion are shifted slightly to the south. The second floor windows of the wing portion of the home are also arranged over the windows of the floor below but there are fewer windows on the second floor of the east face of the home than the first. Most windows are double-hung sash with 6 over 6 panes and made of wood with two 6 over 9 oversized windows at the main front parlor.

The home has two entries: one at the front of the upright portion and one at front of the wing, both from the main front porch. The main entry in the upright portion leads to a main stair hall with an original wood stair with carved newel and balustrade. The hall also has painted wood baseboards comprised of a wide lower board and a recessed cap at the top. To the north of the stair hall is a large parlor. Connected to both the stair hall and the front parlor, is a rear parlor that stretches across the back, at the west.

The original window and door casings exist in each of these rooms and are of a similar two-piece arrangement with flat casing surrounded by a mitered ogee molding. Original plaster walls exist throughout. Original 4-panel doors and original door hardware also appear to be in place at the main rooms. The floors throughout are modern wood parquet floors. Each of these rooms has period-appropriate ceiling medallions with period-appropriate chandeliers.

The second floor of the upright section is comprised of three bedrooms and a bathroom arranged around a central stair hall. Two bedrooms are along the front, at the east and a bedroom and bathroom are located at the back, to the west. The wood flooring throughout this level appears to be original. All of the doors and windows have a simple flat-stock casing with a piece of ogee molding mitered on the inside edge. The doors to the rooms at the east and west of the hall have offset transoms, each with three divided lights.

The entry to the wing portion of the home, leads directly to an open room that appears to be used as a dining room. Three rooms are accessed from this space. To the south are two bedrooms and to the west is a kitchen and modern bathroom. A stair, between the two bedrooms leads to the second floor. The door and window moldings and floor base are a simple flat stock in each of these spaces. The floors throughout are wide pine board flooring. Late nineteenth century light fixtures were added to these spaces.

The second floor of the wing portion of the home is a single open attic space with a large storage closet on the west side. This was once likely used as a bedroom and for storage. It is lower than the second floor of the upright portion of the home but connects to it, at the northeast corner by means of a small series of steps.

Integrity

The home retains its original plan and most of its exterior finish and appearance. The north portion of the home contains the main entry hall and stair, formal gathering spaces as well as the primary upstairs sleeping areas. The service wing, except for the modern bathroom added at the rear, also appears to retain its original footprint.

During a complete renovation in 1981-82 several other modifications also occurred. Cementitious siding was removed from the entire home and the exterior clapboards were repaired and/or replaced as needed. A new asphalt shingle roof was added at that time. The remaining exterior doors, windows, and wood detailing have also been repaired and replaced as needed. Any replacement work appears to have been done with identical materials and replicated details of the original home. The modifications to the siding and trim all add to the historic integrity of the home. While the returns on the eaves had to be rebuilt, the moldings, window casing and trim, corner boards, frieze board, pilasters, and siding are all completely intact and evocative of the home's original style and appearance.

The interior of the home also retains a high degree of its original character. The floors on the first level, in the north wing, were replaced during the renovation with modern wood parquet floors. The original simple tongue and groove plank flooring appears to have been retained in the south wing and on the second floor. Period light fixtures, not original to the home, were added during the renovation and do not detract from the home's historic integrity. Though the flooring in the main part of the home is not original, it has a historic appearance and does not detract from the other original details including doors and door casings, staircase, base molding and trim. The second floor and the wing portion of the home each retain a high degree of historic integrity. Minimal modifications have been made to these spaces spatially and original flooring, doors, trim and exterior wall plaster all exist.

The porch had several modifications that occurred in two eras. After 1886, an existing two-part porch (one in front of the wing and one in front of the upright) was rebuilt as a single wrap-around structure. This is also likely when the rear porch was added. During the complete renovation, in the 1980's, the porch columns at the front were removed and now reside at the Ronald Reagan Boyhood Home in Dixon, Illinois. They were replaced with simple square columns. During this renovation, cementitious shingle knee-walls were also removed from between each of the supporting columns. Though a balustrade originally existed, it was not replaced and the porch remains open. Though the porch has undergone several modifications, due to its openness and the simple design, it does not detract from the overall impression of the home's historic nature.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations).

The Zenas Aplington House is locally significant for listing in the National Register of Historical Places and qualifies for Criterion B as a property associated with the life of a historic figure, Zenas Aplington. Aplington was the founder of Polo and constructed the home in 1853. He lived there until his death in 1862. It also qualifies for Criterion C as it is an excellent example of American folk architecture, an Upright and Wing type of home with Greek Revival influences.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

Zenas Aplington and Polo

Early settlers came to Buffalo Grove in the 1830's and the town got its name due to the presence of large quantities of buffalo bones discovered by the creek.¹ Although the migration of people to the area was slow, it increased to approximately 1,000 by 1852.

Zenas Aplington came to the area in 1837 from Broome County, New York when he was 22. He was very ambitious, serving as a blacksmith, carpenter, legislator, surveyor, merchant, and farmer. In 1842, Aplington moved his existing home, built in 1836, to his farmland, located on the same site as the subject property.²

In 1852, the Illinois Central Railroad wanted to come through Buffalo Grove but the residents opposed the idea or increase land values to the point where it was not feasible. Zenas offered the railroad his farm land, as a convenient means of extending the railroad around Buffalo Grove. Because of the gesture, the Illinois Central made him a railroad contractor and he helped to build eight miles of rail line, beginning a mile south of Polo, running north. He was also awarded free passes on the railroad.³

In about 1853, Aplington constructed a new home for himself on the site of his former home. In March of that year, a survey was made for a new town with Aplington's former farmland at the center. During the railroad's construction, Aplington continued to purchase property in Polo and farmland along the railroad north and west of the community. The total investment amounted to over 1,200 acres. Subsequent additions to the town of Polo came from some of these purchases.⁴ As Polo developed, Aplington gave money and land to the churches and served on the school board and gave land for a park.

When the railroad was complete, in 1856, businesses and residents moved from Buffalo Grove to be near the railroad. The Buffalo Grove Post Office was moved in the middle of the night and Buffalo Grove was no more. The area became known as "Old Town".⁵

Because of his prominence in the community and his activities in local Republican groups, Aplington became a personal friend of Abraham Lincoln. In 1856, Abraham Lincoln was invited to spend two nights in Aplington's house while he was campaigning for John Fremont in Oregon, Illinois.⁶ The event is memorialized by an Illinois State Historical Marker in front of the house.

In 1857, a group of citizens gathered in a brick structure, owned by Aplington, at the corner northeast of Mason and Franklin, to incorporate the town.⁷ Aplington was given the honor of naming the new community and chose "Polo", after the explorer, Marco Polo.⁸ The property of Aplington's former farm now comprises seventeen city blocks in the center of Polo, including the site of the subject property. The area is bound by Webster Street to the south, Division Street on the west, Prairie Avenue on the east, and North Street at the north.

In 1858, the people elected Aplington to be their state legislator. He served as an Illinois State Senator for the counties of Ogle, Carrol, Winnebago, and Boone Counties from 1858 until 1861⁹ when, at President Lincoln's request, he organized the 7th Illinois Calvary and entered the Civil War. He was killed in the First Battle of Corinth in Mississippi on May 8, 1862.¹⁰ His body was returned to Polo and he is buried at Fairmont cemetery.¹¹

The Aplington House helped galvanize local preservationists and became the impetus for forming the Polo Historical Society. In May, 1978, the Polo City Council considered purchasing the Aplington House from the current owner, Jack Papp. They wanted to tear it down and build a parking lot. History buffs in Polo formed a committee called the Polo Preservation Committee to purchase, save, and restore the Aplington House.

The Polo City Council met and agreed to give the committee until June 1, 1978, to raise $18,000 to purchase the home. The Polo Tri-County Press reported that the Preservation Committee had raised enough to save the Aplington House, even topping its goal.¹² Restoration work to restore the home began on Sept. 28, 1978. Cy Witzleb of Dixon was hired by the Committee to supervise the work. On November 22, 1978, the Zenas Aplington Preservation Society changed its name to the Polo Historical Society.¹³

In 1982, The Aplington House is now the Aplington House Museum and tells the story of the history of Polo and contains many artifacts concerning the community that Aplington helped build. There is also an Underground Railroad exhibit showing Ogle County's involvement in this historic movement.

Upright and Wing folk house and Greek Revival architecture

The Aplington house is an excellent example of an Upright and Wing type of American folk architecture. This housing developed in America at the early to mid-part of the nineteenth century. This type of home was built in both rural and small town settings in states abutting the Great Lakes but examples can be found in New England and the South. They can be constructed of frame and wood siding or brick. Locally sourced stone structures of the type can also be found.

There are several characteristics of this type of home but its hallmark feature is the overall arrangement of two masses: an upright gable-front component, typically two-stories, and a gabled side portion running perpendicular in plan to it. This second portion, the "wing", is typically lower in height than the upright portion but two story examples also exist. The upright portion typically includes formal parlors on the ground floor with bedrooms above and the wing is a service structure with kitchen and storage areas. They can be entered through both parts of the home or sometimes through a single door from a porch in front of the wing.¹⁴

Their exterior detailing of Upright and Wing homes is typically simple and not pretentious with simple window casings flat surfaces of siding or brick and regular window arrangements. More elaborate variations of this type of home incorporate Greek Revival and Italianate motifs.

The Aplington House is the best example of an Upright and Wing House with Greek Revival features in Polo. Most Upright and Wing houses are located on Franklin Avenue. There is a modest example at 202 N. Franklin that has been clad in aluminum siding and has its porch filled in. Another similar home at 215 S. Franklin has also been altered in this manner. Another unique example is the Yaekel House, at 401 N. Congress Ave. The Yaekel House, built around 1856, was originally constructed with a single entry, in the wing portion of the home and with Italianate bays on the primary gable front and the side. The bays have been removed and the entry porch now has a garage across the front of it.

Development of the Upright and Wing form was concurrent with the popularity of Greek Revival architecture in America. The most famous practitioners of the style were architect Benjamin Latrobe (1764-1820), William Strickland (1788-1854), and Thomas Walter (1804-1887).¹⁵ Each was responsible for large public buildings in Washington D.C., Philadelphia, and Baltimore that employed a flexible interpretation of Greek architecture, incorporating American botanical motifs. Modern geometric plan configurations were also devised to suit the style to a particular site or use.

The desire for Greek Revival structures was not reserved for high style public buildings. It also gained acceptance in residential design. Greek Revival homes were sometimes designed by trained architects but because the style could be found in many pattern books, they were accessible to a broader public, constructed by local craftspeople and homeowners without the aid of a designer. Its popularity was widespread and could be found in the North and South, from the Eastern Seaboard to the Mississippi. In pre-Civil War America, the style became very fashionable because of its physical appeal but also because of its romantic association with Greek culture, morals and democracy.¹⁶

Like the Upright and Wing homes of the same period, Greek Revival homes were also executed in a variety of materials including wood, brick and stone. Common details on Greek Revival homes include wide corner boards or pilasters at each corner of the home, wide frieze board, and large window heads with classical moldings. Elaborate entry doors surrounded by transoms and sidelights are also common.¹⁷

Greek Revival homes typically had a front that looked like a Greek temple, with a pediment-topped portico supported by Doric columns across the front. An excellent example of this style of home is the John Wood House, in Quincy, Illinois built between 1835 and 1838. Simple versions of homes in this style were built without the portico and some have very few classical embellishments. At the Chanceford Barber House, in Polo, the pediment at the front gable becomes its primary character defining feature. According to local lore, it was built in Buffalo Grove before being moved to its present, on the northwest corner of Locust and Thomas Streets in 1856. A Classical Revival porch addition built in 1899 now breaks up the front of that home.

The Aplington House has the overall form, with a two-story upright portion and a lower wing portion, of an Upright and Wing home and retains its original overall form. Judging from the existence of several similar homes of this period on Franklin Avenue, the home is characteristic of the period in which it was built but it has several aspects that set it apart from those other surviving homes.

The scale of the Aplington home is a bit larger than the other Upright and Wing homes in the area. It has taller rooms, larger windows, and an overall larger footprint. The home also has a level of detail not found in the other local examples. Greek Revival embellishments on the exterior including its wide pilasters frieze board. The relatively large size and careful detailing are indicative of the homeowner's position in the community, as a relatively wealthy individual with a prominent stature. The property is being nominated as an Upright and Wing with Greek Revival features instead of an example of Greek Revival architecture because the windows and the returns on the eaves are not original, but are replicas of what was once there.

The interior of the home also remains in excellent condition. The upright portion of the home has had a new parquet floor put in during the 1982 renovations but otherwise the walls, trim, main staircase with carved newel, and many of the doors and original hardware still exist. In the wing portion and second floor of the home, original wood flooring, doors, trim and walls are all intact and speak to the character of homes of this era.

The overall character and condition of the home are excellent. During its 1982 renovation, all of its exterior wood detailing was restored or replaced in kind. As has been noted, the front porch was modified during this renovation but the modifications are simple and the porch is open so it does not detract from the overall character of the structure.

The home saw many changes over time but it was maintained on its original lot and much of the historic fabric from Aplington's time at the home remains intact. The Aplington house is one of several early frame structures in Polo of this type but its considerable restoration and care make it the finest example in the city.
