Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

This three story farmhouse is a timber frame structure with a hipped roof, a central chimney and clapboard siding. The principal (east) facade is five bays wide with a central entrance. Pilasters supporting a pediment enframe the six panel door and transom. For the first two stories the house has double-hung sash with 12/12 lights. A single small fixed sash with eight lights marks the third story.

Each side elevation of the main section of the house is two bays wide, although the north elevation also has a secondary entrance near the west corner. A one-story utility wing with a gable roof extends from the west side of the house.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Osgood House is one of the best preserved examples of four square hipped roof central chimney 18th-century rural dwellings in Maine both as far as its exterior appearance is concerned and also because of the remarkable survival of its period interior.

According to the history of Durham, Maine, Nathaniel Osgood and his brother, Aaron Osgood moved to Durham in the early 1780's from Deerfield, New Hampshire. However, the Osgoods had originally been from the Amesbury, Massachusetts area. Nathaniel had apparently served in a regiment of Colonel Bagley in the Revolutionary War and Bagley was the proprietor of Royalsborough later to become Durham. Bagley sold lots in Royalsborough to men who had served under him. It is believed that Osgood purchased the land in 1779.
