DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The appearance of the "Seguin" has changed little through the years. The tug is 88' 1" long, 19' 8" in the beam. has a depth of 9:5" and grosses 96 tons in weight. It has a shallow 12 foot draft ideally suited for river work. The steam engine was replaced once in 1906. A new boiler was installed in 1946. The 400 horsepower engine was capable of pushing the "Seguin" through the water at 12 knots. It could operate up to 50 hours without refueling. Minor improvements have been made on the deck during its 85 years of service, but the juniper knees and keep still remain. The original smokestack, whistle, and the famous three footed white rooster that was mounted on the pilot house were removed years ago.

The Bath Marine Research Society has taken the "Seguin" to Bath. Plans are being formulated to place it in drydock and build a roof over it.

At present the "Seguin" is tied up at the Bath Iron Works dock. It leaks, and must be pumped constantly.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Named for Seguin Island in the Kennebec River, the tugboat was launched in Bath, Maine in 1884. For most of her career the tug operated out of Bath, and was used in her early days to tow four and five masted sailing vessels as well as barges from the sea to various parts of the Kennebec River. During the latter stages of her working life the "Seguin" operated out of Belfast on Penobscot Bay (1950-1969).

The "Seguin" also towed cargoes as far south as Norfolk, Virginia, as well as tending to oil tankers and destroyers.

The "Seguin" is the oldest steam operated tug in Maine and possibly in the country. She was considered to be a very reliable craft. She suffered through only one serious mishap, that being a collision with a submerged pier of the Richmond, Maine bridge. The "Seguin" had a four foot hole opened in her side, but divers patched this and the tug was quickly raised, repaired, and placed back in service.

The present 400 horsepower engine was built by the Portland Company 60 years ago.

For many years the "Seguin's" trademark was a large three-footed, white wooden rooster perched on her pilot house. Over 40 years ago the rooster was mysteriously stolen. Many attempts have been made to locate the rooster, but no trace of it remains.

For many years the tug had been the only one left on the Kennebec River. The "Seguin" has had four different owners during her colorful career.

Dear Carol:

I am writing to request that the steam tugboat Seguin (NR 12/2/69) be removed from the National Register of Historic Places.

As outlined in Volume 12 No. 4 (1989) of the CRM Bulletin, the efforts made during the 1970s and early 1980s to save this historic vessel failed for a variety of reasons. An assessment made in 1987 of the surviving fabric, therefore, led to the conclusion that documentation of the structure to HAER standards and the salvaging of select pieces was the only recourse left for it. This project has now been carried to completion.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

Earle G. Shettleworth, Jr.
State Historic Preservation Officer
