RAILROADS.

In this age a city of considerable size cannot be attained without railroad facilities. The day was when a location on a good harbor or river was essential. To-day the site of a city is the more important of the two, and when you have both means of transportation confined on a large scale, we find a metropolis such as Chicago or New York. Trinidad is to-day a railroad center of no mean pretensions. The A. & W. S. F. R. R. with its main line from Chicago to Los Angeles, has been operating in Trinidad for a decade. Its facilities and ability to do business in the west are surpassed by none and equalled by few. This road is progressive, constantly enlarging its equipment and adding to its extensions. Trinidad is certainly fortunate in having the main line of such a system. The Denver & Rio Grande, one of the best known systems in the west, and the fastest
