DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Cahaba, also spelled Cahawba, is located slightly south of the juncture of the Cahaba and Alabama rivers on the west side of the Alabama River about fourteen miles south of Selma. The landmark was the site of Alabama's first permanent capital from 1820 to 1826.

There are a few scattered structural evidences surviving in the town. Part of the walls and a column of the Methodist Church built in 1849 still remain after a fire in 1954. The Fambro House built in 1840 by Judge William W. Fambro is still used as a dwelling. Columns of the Crocheron Mansion still stand, along with street markers and a cemetery.

In its heyday, Cahaba was a thriving city with the capitol building as its focal point. The town had numerous shops, warehouses, hotels, boarding houses, homes, schools, and the like required for a state capital city and busy river port. There were a number of fine mansions among which particularly notable were the homes of the merchants Crocheron and Perine. The palatial Perine Mansion had one of the first if not the first air-conditioning systems developed in the South. Water from the deepest artesian well in the world (900 feet) was pumped through pipes in the walls of the 26 rooms to cool the house. The Crocheron House was the site of the meeting between General James H. Wilson and General Nathan Bedford Forrest to exchange prisoners after the battle of Selma on April 2, 1865.

The Alabama Historical Commission and the Cahaba Historical Commission plan to create an interpretive historical and recreational park on the site.

Capitals, the Commission recommended to Governor William Wyatt Bibb that Tuscaloosa be made the permanent capital. Whether this is true or not, Bibb practically forced the selection of Cahaba upon the legislature by securing a 1620-acre land grant to the state for establishing the state government at the site. In 1818 Dallas County was established and Cahaba became the county seat the following year.

Willis Roberts and Benjamin Clements were appointed by Governor Bibb to survey the site and lay out a town. In May, 1819, the first land auction was held, and 182 lots were sold for $123,856 of which $30,964 was in cash which went into the State treasury. The legislature appropriated $10,000 for a capitol building to be completed by June, 1820. The building, a two-story brick building, was 158 feet long and 43 feet wide and was located at the corner of Capitol Avenue and Vine Street.

While Cahaba was being established, Huntsville became the temporary capital of Alabama and was the site of the first constitutional convention. One provision of the Constitution stated that Cahaba would be the permanent capital unless another town was selected in five years. A powerful faction in North Alabama was determined that Cahaba would not remain the capital of Alabama.

Before the first session of the Alabama legislature in November, 1820, Governor William Wyatt Bibb died as a result of a riding accident, and Cahaba lost its most influential champion. His brother Thomas Bibb became acting governor, but Thomas came from Limestone County in the Tennessee Valley and did not share William Bibb's championship of the Alabama -Cahaba river faction.

Cahaba grew rapidly between 1820 and 1825. The State Supreme Court was organized with Clement C. Clay as Chief Justice. A state bank was set up with a $2,000,000 capitalization. General Lafayette was entertained there in 1825 during his tour through the state. Unfortunately 1825 was the year of the great flood which inundated the city. Part of the Statehouse crumbled during the flood. As a result the legislature voted to move the capital to Tuscaloosa which was done in 1826.

Cahaba practically became a ghost town. The legislature instructed the State Treasurer to sell the capitol building for not less than $3,000. When no buyer could be found, the structure was given to Dallas County in 1829 for use as a courthouse. In 1834 Dallas County constructed a new courthouse within Arch Street at the corner of Vine and First Avenue North. In 1837 the capital lot and the one next to it were sold to Matthew Gage for $349.50. In all probability the Capitol had been torn down and the material used in the new courthouse.

Cahaba revived around 1830 only to suffer another disastrous flood in 1833. In the 1840's and 1850's the town became the commercial, social, and shipping center of the rich Black Belt area surrounding it. Its importance was increased in 1859 by the construction of the railroad from Marion to Cahaba which brought a greater volume of goods into Cahaba to be shipped on the Alabama River.

During the Civil War there was a large Confederate prison located at Cahaba. Shortly before the end of the war another flood inundated the town and as a result in the following year, 1866, the county seat was moved to Selma. The town slowly died after that, and by the turn-of-the-century Cahaba was a ghost town.
