Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Robert L. McKenzie House at 17 East Third Court is a one and one-half story, wood frame vernacular residence with an irregular plan, occupying a 160' X 95' lot in the old section of Panama City, Florida. The house rests on a brick pier foundation and is surmounted by a gable roof with shed dormers on both the front and rear. A screened porch extends the width of the main (southwest) facade, and there is a smaller screened porch located at the northwest corner of the rear of the house. A small porte-cochere, which now serves as a potio, is found on the northwest elevation. All of the major windows are 1/1 double hung sashes.

The McKenzie House is located approximately three blocks northwest of St. Andrews Bay in downtown Panama City, a community of 34,000 persons, found on the Gulf coast of Florida about halfway between Tallahassee and Pensacola. The residence is one of the oldest buildings in the area and stands in close proximity to governmental buildings (county courthouse, city hall, main post office, police department) and the commercial district associated with the historical center of the city. Built just one year after the incorporation of Panama City, the McKenzie House dates from a time when residential building were erected within the downtown area because of the smallness of the population.

The house stands at the front of the lot, close to the sidewalk, at the intersection of Third Courd and Park Street (shown as Park Avenue on the map). It overlooks McKenzie Park and is the only building occupying the triangular city block bounded by Third Court, Luvern Avenue, and Park Street. The grounds of the house are landscaped with trees (magnolia, oak, and hickory), ornamental shrubs, and flower beds. The property is bounded by a wood picket fence.

The exterior of the house is simple and reflects the influence of no particular style. The three-bay screened porch on the main facade has boxed columns surmounted by a plain entablature which supports a roof deck surrounded by a balustrade. The square balusters and rails connect chamfered posts set along the edge of the deck.

The main facade wall is also divided into three bays, each containing glass paneled French doors that provide access between the porch and the interior of the house. A one-story bay extends out from the main block of the house on the elevation and runs the length of the house. This was added in 1925 to enlarge the living room and allow for the construction of a "sun room."

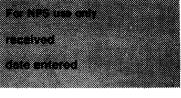

The present front porch was also constructed in 1925 to replace a somewhat shallower one when the upstairs living area was enlarged. The house had two gable dormers which was replaced by a large shed dormer with a central doorway leading out onto the deck. The earlier porch was supported by thin Tuscan columns.

DESCRIPTION

Only the front half of the house contains two floors. The rear section-containing the sun room, a bathroom, nursery, and short hall running between the sun room and kitchen--is covered with a gable roof that is oriented perpendicular to the main roof. Another gable covering the kitchen, breakfast room, and rear porch intersects one just mentioned at a right angle on the northwest side of the house.

The first floor of the main block of the house contains only three rooms: living room, library/office, and dining room. There is also a small foyer containing the stairs to the second floor. The house has no central hallway. The living room is considerably larger than the other two rooms and has the only fireplace in the house.

The second floor contains two bedrooms, a bathroom, a large stair landing, and a storage area. The master bedroom occupies the northeast one-third of the floor. The second bedroom is located at the front of the house and is irregular in shape. The bathroom is located at the rear of the house and is expressed on the exterior--as is the master bedroom--by a continuous shed dormer.

The house stands today approximately as it was enlarged in 1925. The upstairs was enlarged to provide additional living space, and on the first floor the living room and sun room were added. The only other structures on the property are the original garage and a lattice sided building immediately next to it located at the rear of the lot. The lattice building was used as a family laundry facility and had a hand water pump and a laundry tub. The structure is now used as a wood shed. The garage is used for storage. Immediately to the rear of the house, surrounded by flower beds is an original rubble stone sundial.

Other Properties: Other contributing structures found on the lot are a one-story wood frame garage and a one-story lattice sided wood shed. The garage is rectangular in plan, has a hip roof, and drop siding. The entrance has been enclosed with plywood. The wood shed has a shed roof supported by posts and is sided with lattice strips.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Mckenzie House is significant primarily for its association with Robert L. McKenzie, who was one of the founders and developers of Panama City, Florida, and Bay County. He is further connected with the area's early industry and economic growth by direct association with the production of turpentine and pine rosin products and by furthering the building of a railroad and highway network in the county. He also played an important role in local and state politics, serving two terms as both mayor of Panama City and state representative from Washington County. The house is further significant as one of the first residential structures erected in the newly incorporated city of Panama City. The house was McKenzie's residence and place of business for forty-four years.

Robert Lee McKenzie was born on his father's farm near Oglethorpe, Georgia, in Macon County on October 16, 1870. He was the third of seven children born to William Newton and Mary (Southwell) McKenzie.¹ He was educated in the county schools and as a youth worked on his father's farm. In his early twenties Robert L. McKenzie engaged in the general merchandise business, first in Arabi and later in Cordele, Georgia. About 1897, he decided to try his hand at the manufacture of naval stores--turpentine and pine rosin products--in nearby Oakfield.²

About 1900, McKenzie moved to Taylor County, Florida, to continue in the naval stores business, but moved to Washington County in the western panhandle of the state two years later to operate a plant owned by A.J. Gay, which had been founded in 1898. The mill was located near Harrison, a small village located approximately two miles southeast of the town of St. Andrews, at that time the largest community in the area with about 2,000 inhabitants. Harrison had been founded during a brief north Florida land boom and named Park Resort, but the name was changed in 1889 to honor newly inaugurated President of the United States William Henry Harrison, who awarded the new settlement its first post office. The land boom was short-lived, and the village was left largely abandoned once the real estate in the area declined in value.³

McKenzie and partners named Vickers acquired ownership of the Gay plant in 1905, and he began to take an interest in reviving Harrison as a town site. Along with three other men, he founded the Gulf Coast Development Company to promote the sale of residential and commercial within the renovated town plat. The officers of the company were W.J. Jackson, president; R.L. McKenzie, vice president; and G.M. West, secretary. A fourth man, named A.B. Steele, from Atlanta received a fourth share in the company to helf finance the building of a railroad link between the community and Dothan, Alabama. The new line was named the Atlanta and St. Andrews Bay Railroad. McKenzie served for a time as one of the officers of the eighty-five mile long line. He was also one of the stockholders and directors of the Birmingham, Columbus & St. Andrews Bay Railroad, a thirty-eight mile line running between Chipley and South Port in Washington, County.⁴

SIGNIFICANCE

Harrison was renamed Panama City to honor the Panama Canal, then under construction. The town was incorporated under its new name in 1908, and in February, 1909, McKenzie was unanimously elected mayor by the town's thirty-four qualified voters. He was again elected without opposition in 1911. During the same period he served two terms in the state legislature as a representative from Washington County. Much of his energy during this time was spent laying the groundwork for the creation of a new county, of which Panama City was to be the County Seat.⁵ By 1913, Panama City and the surrounding area had gained sufficient population to consider the forming of a new county. A five man committee, chaired by McKenzie, was selected by the Panama City Chamber of Commerce to decide upon a new name for it. "Canal" and "Bay" were the only two names considered, the latter winning three votes to two.⁶

On July 1, 1913, Bay County was created from portions of Washington and Calhoun counties by an act of the state legislature. McKenzie had done much of the groundwork among his fellow representatives and influenced leaders from various parts of the state to support the new county division. To honor him for his tireless efforts toward that end, McKenzie and his wife were invited to the official signing of the bill. The governor used a gold-pointed tortoise shell pen which McKenzie had purchased on his recent honeymoon in Havana, Cuba. The pen is still on display in the office/library of the McKenzie House.⁷

Robert L. McKenzie married Belle Booth, a widow, in 1912. She had come to the region from Escanaba, Michigan, with her husband, Charles E. Booth, about a decade earlier. They had settled in the community of Lynn Haven, and after her husband's death in 1908, Belle Booth moved to nearby Panama City, where she became the postmistress. In 1909, she acquired a parcel of land from the Gulf Coast Development Company and built a house on it. It became the family home after she married McKenzie. McKenzie remained in the house after Belle died in 1918. On August 5, 1920, he married Blandford Dixon, a school teacher whose family had moved to Panama City in 1912. They had two daughters, Anne and Ellen, who are the current owners of the house.⁹

By 1920, Bay County had a population of 11,000 of which 2,000 persons lived in Panama City. Five years later the number of persons living within the incorporated area of the city had been increased to nearly 5,000 by the annexation of the nearby communities of St. Andrews and Millville.¹⁰ Growth brought the need for the construction of new highways, and the Gulf Coast Highway Association was formed to improve the link between Panama City and Pensacola. The president of the association was Alfred I. DuPont and the treasurer was R.L. McKenzie. The efforts of the association resulted not only in the construction of an improved roadway, but also in the building of two bridges in the Panama City area, thus eleminating the use of ferries.¹¹

SIGNIFICANCE

McKenzie was instrumental in the location of Bob Jones College near Lynn Haven, the first institution of higher learning in Bay County. When prominent evangelist Bob Jones decided to found a college, McKenzie influenced him to build in the area. The charter for the institution was signed in the office of the McKenzie House and the school opened on September 4, 1927. McKenzie served on the executive board of the school through its growth into a university, even after its moves to Cleveland, Tennessee, and finally to Greenville, South Carolina. In 1951, McKenzie was given an honorary degree of laws from the university.¹²

Of vital importance to Panama City during the Great Depression was the location of the International Paper Company mill in the city. A group of businessmen, led by McKenzie, had learned that the company wished to expand and convinced company officials to choose Panama City as the site of their mill. Construction began in 1929 on what was billed as "the world's largest Kraft paper mill." The plant began operations in 1931 and while other cities were suffering from the closing of business and industry, Panama City continued to grow and prosper.

McKenzie was also deeply involved in the construction of the "Drummond Cut" canal, an intracoastal waterway facility completed in 1938.¹⁴ During World War II he was chairman of the Bay County chapter of the American Red Cross and served as a member of the Selective Service Board.¹⁵ McKenzie died in 1956, and in 1964 the name of the public park which the McKenzie House overlooks was changed from "City Park" to "McKenzie Park."
