DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

St. James in Old Town is typical of the modest but distinctively designed Episcopal churches built in America in the late 19th century. Following a style popularized by Richard Upjoha's model country church in Rural Architecture of 1852, later Gothic Revivalists such as Henry Vaughn created more sophisticated interpretations of the small parish church. Vaughn's St. James is a good example of this architectural trend.

St. James was built in 1892 upon the rectangular granite foundation of an earlier Episcopal chapel of 1852, which was replaced because of its deteriorated structural condition. The present church is of frame construction, stands one story high with a gable roof, and has an exterior sheathing of, wooden shingles. The facade or north wall is composed of seven bays. The first bay is comprised of a tall square tower near the northwest corner of the building. The first story of the tower has an entrance on the front. This entrance has a pair of arched board and batten doors with medieval style iron hinges. Surrounding the doorway is a gable roofed portico on which the gable is decorated with half timbering and simple bargeboards. On the front of the tower's second story is a vertical rectangular window with diamond paned glass. The third stage of the tower is the open octagonal belfry which has above each of it's openings, a panel of simple Gothic tracery. The belfry is capped by an octagonal spire.

The remainder of St. James facade is on the first story. To the left of the tower is a series of three, three part arched windows with diamond paned glass. To the left of the windows is a secondary entrance, which is located in a two part projecting vestibule. One section has a half gable roof which continues from the roof of the main building. The doorway is located on the west wall, while a small three part diamond paned window appears on the north side. The other section has a gable roof which projects perpendicular from the main building. A rectangular brick chimney is located at the point where this roof joins the main one. On the north or facade wall of this section is a two part diamond paned window. The gable is decorated with unornamented bargeboards and cut out work. The final facade bay consists of a two part diamond paned window with simple tracery at the top of each section.

The east and west walls of St. James Episcopal Church have similar features. Each wall possesses a large rectangular window, which contains eight elongated vertical sections that have diamond paned glass and simple tracery appearing at the top. Each gable is ornamented with simple bargeboards and a gable ornament with a cut out decoration of two Gothic trefoils and a quartrefoil. Behind this ornament is a small rectangular window. The church's south wall contains a series of three part diamond paned windows identical to those on the facade.

The interior of St. James is basically unchanged from Henry Vaughn's designs. On either side of the sanctuary is a series of Gothic columns which support Gothic arches on the ceiling. The simple natural pine pews

St. James Episcopal Church stands in the center of Old Town's business district. In addition to its significance as an example of late 19th century Episcopal church architecture by Henry Vaughn, the building is a major focal point in a community which has few surviving local landmarks.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

St. James Parish in Old Town was organized in 1849 and the first church building of Gothic design, was erected in 1852. This structure proved unable to withstand the stresses of time and in 1892 was replaced on the same foundation with the present building designed by the noted Gothicist, Henry Vaughn, one of only four designs by him in Maine. The others are the Searles Science Center and Hubbard Hall at Bowdoin College and St. Andrews Episcopal Church in Newcastle.

Henry Vaughn, particularly well known as an ecclesiastical architect, was born in England in 1846. Educated there he studied under George F. Boadley, the famous English Gothicist. Vaughn came to the United States in 1881, after several years of successful practice. His apparent intention was to bring an authentic interpretation of Gothic architecture to America.

Opening an office in Boston, Vaughn acquired over the next several years a considerable reputation in the design of English Gothic churches and institutional buildings. In the early 1900's Bodley, now himself in this country and established in Hartford, Connecticut, invited him to share in preparing a competitive design for the proposed cathedral church (S.S. Peter and Paul) in Washington. Successful in the competition, the two men were commissioned architects for the project in 1906. Following Bodley's death the next year, Vaughn assumed full charge of the work on this monumental edifice, a task which he continued until his own death in 1917.

St. James Church, though relatively small, nevertheless reflects the skill and maturity of its designer and is important as an excellent example of Henry Vaughn's work.
