The Cumberland Presbyterian Church is a single story, buff brick ecclesiastical structure which originally featured a Greek cross plan with an inset corner bell tower (a rectangular addition was attached to the eastern elevation which is longer than the church building itself) and which was designed in the transitional Romanesque Revival/Classical Revival style. The cross-gable roof is covered with composition shingles and set behind a slightly raised parapet; the bell tower's pyramidal roof is clad with metal. The continuous foundation is built of stone.

The southern or main elevation is composed of the pyramidal roofed bell tower to the west and the gable end of the sanctuary to the east. The tower is punctuated only by a pointed arch entry on the first floor and a segmental arch, louvered belfry opening on the second story. The entry is accessed by a low flight of concrete stairs and filled with flush plank wood pair doors beneath a stained glass tympanum. Brick voussoirs surround the arch. The belfry opening is filled with wood louvers and the metal, pyramidal roof finishes the tower. The only other decoration on the tower is the three-quarter height brick corner buttresses with stone offsets. The gable end features a similar segmental arch opening in the peak filled with wood louvers. The monumental and elaborate stained glass window below is composed of a brick arch which separates the glazing into two fields. The outside field consists of an arched band of glazing above a horizontal wood lintel, divided by wood mullions into three curved segments, and two narrow, rectangular double-hung sash windows below. Inside the brick arch a larger, double-hung, figural sash window is surmounted by a small glazed arched opening. The western elevation is virtually a mirror image of the southern elevation, with the exception of the tower's first story, which on this elevation is punctuated with a segmental arch stained glass window, and the gable roofed rear entrance vestibule to the north.

The rear or northern elevation allows direct access to the sanctuary at the extreme west through a single door. The elevation is lighted by another monumental stained glass window to the west of the attached gable roof vestibule, which itself is lighted by a single one-over-one wood sash window. The two story, brick 1946 addition is two bays wide on this side and six bays in length on its eastern elevation. Each bay is filled with a pair of six-over-six wood sash windows. The southern elevation of the addition extends just beyond the front of the church, though it is well hidden by trees, and is punctuated only by a door at the western end and by another at the southern end of the western elevation of the projecting portion of the addition.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church is in a remarkably good state of repair and has suffered only minor alterations with the exception of the addition of the two story structure on the back of the building. However, this addition is visually unobtrusive and does not detract from the historic impression of the design.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church is in very good condition.

Significance

Criterion C, local significance

The Cumberland Presbyterian congregation was organized in 1824 in Searcy and occupied two other structures before the construction of this church in 1903. The congregation remained vital over the years and helped sponsor a number of community and cultural activities in the city.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church (Part E, Historic Context #3) is both reflective of a relatively prosperous period in the history of Searcy, when its residents and institutions were able to commission better and more elaborate designs, and a high quality example of the type of stylistic combinations which were occurring in the early twentieth century. The pervasive popularity of the Romanesque Revival was rapidly giving way to the Classical and Renaissance Revivals, though patrons seemed to want a little of each. The monumental arches of this design clearly recall the Romanesque while the lighter materials, the less heavy detail and the preference for smoother, sheer wall surfaces heralds a return to the formal European Classical and Neoclassical prototypes. Nevertheless, the Cumberland Presbyterian Church remains a successful synthesis of these contemporaneous architectural styles and is certainly one of the finest institutional examples of this transitional style in White County.

Reviewer's Comments

The boundaries of this property are presently located along building lines. A resource listed in the National Register should include all features of the property which contribute to its significance. In almost all cases this includes its historic setting. Page 77 of National Register Bulletin 16, Guidelines for Completing National Register of Historic Places Forms, states that "the boundaries of buildings should include the land surrounding the building, unless the lot occupied by the building contains no surrounding land as in the central business district of most cities."

Please revise the boundaries to include the property historically associated with the resource. If a portion of the original setting has lost its integrity, please explain.
