DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Dickey's Barbershop is a single-story, frame and clapboard, octagonal structure which was built in 1894 by Charlie Conn. Reputed to have been an excellent carpenter, Conn constructed many houses in Rives. Shortly after the shop was completed, a small room and covered porch were attached to the southern and southwestern sides of the building. The original shake roof was replaced with asbestos shingles early in this century; except for the modern roof, the appearance of the building has remained materially unchanged. Each of the octagonal sides measures approximately nine feet in width.

Only one of the shop's three barber chairs, potbellied stove, mirror, a few odd chairs and benches, and washstand and china washbasin still remain in the building. The shaving mug cabinet, shoeshine chair, barber pole, captain's chairs, bathtub, and water heater are stored elsewhere or have been lost.

Sam Dickey offered his customers the luxury of a bath as well as the customary tonsorial services. The bathtub was housed in the small room. A tank mounted on a raised wooden platform adjacent to the shop supplied the water, which was heated by a coal-burning stove with coils wound around it, to the bathchamber.

The building is presently in sore need of repairs; the roof leaks, and the interior has deteriorated. But if the hairtonics and shampoos and the scissors and clippers were returned to the shelves, if the candy-striped pole were replaced; and if the sign, "Dickey's Tip Top Barber Shop," were repainted in the window, the shop could be reopened and the customers again served.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Nineteenth-century, octagonal structures are extremely rare; only three or four are known to exist in the state. Dickey's Barbershop is the sole example of this style of architecture located to date in West Tennessee. This building is doubly important since it is the only known surviving octagonal barbershop in the state.

Samuel Hamilton Dickey (born, April 28, 1867) owned a barbershop in the business district of Rives before he had the present building erected in 1894 on the northeast corner of his house lot in North Rives. Located across the tracks from the Newport News and Mississippi Valley Railroad (later the Illinois Central) Depot, drummers frequently left rental orders for John Dickey's Livery Stable rigs at brother Sam's shop. Samuel Dickey served as a town alderman during the first decade of this century. He operated his tonsorial parlor until his death on October 8, 1932.

Melvin Dickey began working with his father at the age of sixteen and continued the family business for thirty-five years, until he died in 1967. After having served the needs of the citizens of Rives, as well as the passengers who waited to change trains in the tiny railroad junction town, for seventy-three years, the barbershop closed permanently. The heirs of Samuel H. Dickey steadfastly refuse to sell or rent the building. Dickey's Barbershop remains a landmark and contributes to the uniqueness of Rives.
