DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This building was constructed in 1854 by the miners residing in Douglas Flat. The original 20' x 24' structure resulted due to a need for a meeting hall and church. By 1856 families began moving to the area and the need for a school building was evident. At this time it was realized that the structure had been constructed on ground that was fertile with gold deposits and it would be profitable to move the building to a new location. A site was selected on a hillside approximately one-quarter mile from the original site to relocate the building. The building was re-located to a 3-acre site which was designated to be used as a school church, community center and cemetery.

Examination in 1971 revealed that the original building was constructed of European cedar and utilized a fabric comparable to cheese cloth for the interior wall surfaces. The building was constructed of lumber in its entirety with windows and the finished lumber, judged by architects and builders to have been imported from Europe.

The building is a simply designed example of contemporary building vernacular of the gold rush period. Its simple, unobstructed lines suggest the classic styling familiar to the builders in the East before coming to California. Classic styling, based upon Greek and Roman revival forms, was the preferred form for public buildings of the 1850's. The building is classic revival at its simplest. The temple front of Greek revival is merely suggested by the classic pedimented gable. The elements of the cornice have been reduced to a band of wide horizontal boards and a strip of moulding below the eaves. The treatment of the entrance is suggestive of early classic forms with an architrave supported by flat pilasters. The composition is capped by a small rectangular belfry.

In 1856 the first school was held in Douglas Flat according to the record of the County Superintendent of School. It is concluded that shortly thereafter an addition was constructed adding sixteen (16) feet to the length of the building. There is evidence to indicate that the exterior lumber was also imported as the texture is not indicative of native lumber. In addition the exterior clap-boards are narrow in width and smooth finished. It is concluded that at the time of constructing the addition the interior was all finished in a tongue and grooved pine lumber.

The interior, as it appears today, was one large room. The finish, both ceiling and walls, are of tongue and grooved pine. The floor is made of soft pine and is very dark colored from the treatment of oil to preserve the wood. Until the early 1950's a wood burning stove was used for heat. The original opening for the stove pipe is still visible in the center of the room and was apparently not changed when the addition was built.

This school was used until 1956 when it was closed due to the lack of students. In 1971, the school was re-opened to be used for a kindergarten class. When the need was known for an additional classroom, residents of the district came together and placed the building in a usable form. The rennovation consisted of small repairs, repainting the exterior and interior, the installation of an approved electrical system to replace the inadequate service and the repair of the existing heating system. There were no structural changes in the work completed.

Upon completion of the new Michelson school in Murphys it will be transferred to the Douglas Flat Community Club to be maintained as a museum and community hall.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Douglas Flat School shows the simplistic classic styling of Gold Rush architecture, based upon forms familiar to its builders in the East. According to Harold Kirker, the Greek and Roman based classic styles were preferred for civic architecture in California in the 1850's.

Built by local labor, the schoolhouse combines the builders' recollections of "proper" styles known in the East and the elements of frontier construction, resulting in a composition of classic styling at its simplest - the elements of classic styling are suggested, but not strongly developed along formal Greek or Roman Revival lines.

This building, in addition to being architecturally significant, is important for its role in the history of the State of California. With the discovery of gold in 1848 at Douglas Flat came many settlers to seek their wealth. To enable each miner a fair share of the prospects for gold, a system was devised to allot an area eight feet by eight feet as the surface boundaries of the claim. All that came, however, were not actually engaged in mining for gold. Tradesman and merchants established businesses to provide the miners with the goods and services needed to carry on the mining activities.

Early records indicate that the only area not available to the miners pick and shovel was the Douglas Flat school site. The first teachers, in addition to a small salary were granted exclusive rights to mine gold on the school site.

As the community grew into a large settlement, families began arriving to make this area one of permanent buildings to replace the tent city that had developed so rapidly. The school, with its variety of uses, played an important role in the development of this area.

The trustees of the Vallecito Union School District have declared its intention to arrange for the preservation of the structure for historical purposes. This site at the present time is visited by many people annually as it is part of the history of this region. From a national interest this building played a significant role in the development of California as a state.

It is the opinion of the trustees that, if the site and building are not preserved, the nation will lose a valuable contribution to the history.

The community of Douglas Flat is California State Historical Landmark 272.
