ADDENDUM TO "WILLOW GLEN"

The outbuildings at Willow Glen form a complex which along with the main house documents plantation life in both the 18th and 19th centuries. The most significant of these outbuildings is the tobacco barn located southwest of the house next to Barstow Road.

In his 1800 Essay on the Culture and Commerce of Tobacco, William Tatham stated that among the various types of tobacco houses he observed in Virginia, "the most ordinary kinds consist of two square pens built out of logs." The building which Tatham goes on to describe is nearly a perfect description of the structure at Willow Glen.

The two pens there are made out of notched logs and placed on a line with each other at the opposite extremes of an oblong square with a space large enough to accomodate a wagon left inbetween. The two structures share a common roof (as if evidenced by the plates) and when seen from within the modern structure which now houses them, appear quite like the drawing provided by Tatham.

The pens at Willow Glen are twenty feet square which is one of two sizes mentioned by Tatham. Also mentioned in the Essay are the doors cut into each of the sides which form the passageway and "sticks of tobacco" hung in four foot tiers. The only noticeable difference between Willow Glen and the 1800 description is that the center passageway, which appears to be narrower than the width of a single pen in the Tatham drawing, is identical to the width of a single pen at Willow Glen. The length of the entire structure then is sixty feet. (See attached plan.)

A plan providing for square pens made of logs separated by an open passageway, but having a common roof apparently constitutes somewhat of an American tradition. It is pointed out by H. Morrison, T. Waterman and others that in the early 18th Century, the "dog-run" was a common plan for log cabins in Virginia and North Carolina. Minus the chimneys, windows and chinking necessary for a house, one can see that the two plans are identical. The tobacco barn at Willow Glen thus shows that a common plan for log construction sufficed for both house and barn. 7

Assuming that Tatham's observations in Virginia in the 1790's are applicable to Southern Maryland (and there is little reason not to since both were tidewater tobacco cultures which have exhibited many similarities in other areas of architecture), we may see the double-pen tobacco house at Willow Glen as one of the very few remaining examples of what was once a common type. This significance is further reinforced when one considers the importance of such a structure to the tobacco process which was in itself a determining factor in 18th century tidewater society.
