The Lum House probably was built by Samuel Clement, who bought the property from Andrew Peterson in 1724 and built a mill nearby in 1736. The house and mill were the property of Isaac Allman during the years following the Revolution; from Allman, the property passed ultimately to his son-in-law and grandson, both named John Lum. When the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal was built during the eighteen-twenties, Lum's millpond provided water for the summit level. During the several rebuildings of the canal during the nineteenth century, the outlet of Lums Pond was moved to a new course, leaving the old mill stream dry.

The principal part of the house is a two-story, three-bay brick house, laid in English bond on the sides and rear, and in Flemish bond with glazed headers on the front (south) wall. It features a belt course all around, and pent eaves between the first and second stories. The roof and the west chimney are recent replacements. A three-bay brick extension to the east was originally one story, laid in common bond. After 1809, the extension was raised to two stories, but the roofline and fenestration of the original wing can be detected in the brickwork. A stone rear wall appears to be a later alteration to the wing.

Nearby are ruined outbuildings of unknown age, and several newer outbuildings. To the west stands the reconstructed Buck Tavern.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Lum House is an interesting specimen of a Delaware farmhouse built during the first half of the eighteenth century.

Legend states that it was the home of Samuel Davies, an early Presbyterian leader who was one of the founders of Princeton University. Davies' parents lived about five miles away, but they may have moved here during a religious dispute that resulted in their joining the nearby St. George's Creek Presbyterian congregation.

The date of construction is not known. From architectural evidence it would appear to have been built during the first quarter of the eighteenth century. Geographical evidence argues convincingly for its construction after 1704; the road in front of the house, to which it is oriented, was opened sometime between 1705 and 1725.

Samuel Clement's mill, on this property, was one of the earliest mill seats in the western part of New Castle County.
