Description

The Sumter County Courthouse, on East Canal Street in Sumter, the seat of Sumter County, South Carolina, was built in 1907 and is a two-story brick building on a raised basement story.

It was constructed as an I-plan courthouse set in a deep one-and-six-tenths-acre block. The courthouse is centered on the block with its long axis parallel to Main Street, which allows for a substantial lawn and landscaping in front of the facade (west elevation) as well as between the east elevation and Harvin Street. The rear "notch" of the initial I-plan has been subsequently filled in after an addition and modernization was completed in 1965.

The central entrance is through a recessed portico of six unfluted columns of the Scamozzi order, set upon high base blocks and arranged in two pairs with single columns at each end. A monumental entry stair with wide limestone cheek walls leads up to the portico and the entrance to the building. The entrance is flanked on either side by a paired window, each of which is flanked by narrow windows. Also within the recessed portico and surmounting the entrance and flanking windows are three large arched windows that light the courtroom. The entrance is surmounted by a small balustraded balcony on the upper level. The building is constructed with a channeled ashlar stone base. The channeled pattern of the base is continued in the body of the building constructed of yellow Roman brick. To either side of the portico are window bays, with those on the first floor being topped by a narrow entablature crowned by an open triangular pediment and framed by pilasters. The second story windows contrast with the classical aedicular form of the windows of the first floor and are triple in formation with surmounting panels and transoms with typical crisscross Neoclassical or Beaux-Arts tracery. The upper windows feature jack arch lintels with keystones. A stone entablature surrounds the building, echoing the basement story. Its frieze is punctuated with disks or roundels at the portico and blocks with guttae bands. A classical balustraded parapet wall of brick and limestone caps the building above the roofline.

The side [north and south] elevations are nearly identical to each another, being slightly reduced versions of the courthouse's facade. The side entrances consist of double-leaf doors and topped with bracketed segmental arched pediments. Above each door is a large arched window with impost blocks and keystone.

The rear, or east, elevation of the building was modified by an addition built 1963-1965 by James and Durant, AIA and Associates, a Sumter architectural firm. This remarkably sympathetic addition, while three stories in height, is set beneath the original building's entablature. It nevertheless reflects an increasing reliance on modernist abstraction. Its entablature is dramatically simplified, with only a plain brick parapet topped by a cast-stone coping. The eastern entrance is marked by an arcuated projecting cast-stone porch, which enthusiastically recalls the Beaux-Arts classicism of the façade.

The interior of the courthouse was extensively remodeled during the 1963-1965 renovations. While its floor plan remains intact, it retains little of its original appearance.

Statement of Significance

The Sumter County Courthouse is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A for its significance in Politics/Government as the symbol and seat of Sumter County government since 1907 and under Criterion C for its significance in Architecture, as one of nine South Carolina county courthouses designed between 1903 and 1915 by prominent architect William Augustus Edwards.

From 1903 to 1915 Edwards designed nine county courthouses in South Carolina:

- Darlington County Courthouse, Darlington (1903)
- Kershaw County Courthouse, Camden (1904-1905)
- Sumter County Courthouse, Sumter (1905-1906)
- Abbeville County Courthouse, Abbeville (1908)
- Lee County Courthouse, Bishopville (1908-1909)
- Dillon County Courthouse, Dillon (1911)
- Calhoun County Courthouse, St. Matthews (1913)
- York County Courthouse, York (1914)
- Jasper County Courthouse, Ridgeland (1915)

Of these, only the Darlington County and Kershaw County courthouses have been demolished.

In 1981, the South Carolina State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO) prepared "Courthouses in South Carolina Designed by William Augustus Edwards", a thematic resources nomination including the courthouses in Abbeville, Calhoun, Dillon, Jasper, Lee and York Counties; these six courthouses were individually listed in the National Register of Historic Places on 30 October 1981 (the courthouses in Abbeville and York Counties were already contributing properties in the Abbeville Historic District, listed in the Register on 14 September 1972, and the York Historic District, listed in the Register on 18 October 1979).

The Sumter County Courthouse, although a contributing property in the Sumter Historic District, listed in the National Register on 21 April 1975, was not individually nominated as part of the "Courthouses in South Carolina Designed by William Augustus Edwards" thematic resources listing. This nomination seeks to correct that oversight.

Edwards (1866-1939), a native of Darlington, was a prolific South Carolina architect of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. He was educated at Richmond College and the University of South Carolina. From about 1893 to 1902 Edwards was associated with Charles Coker Wilson (1864-1933)—another Darlington County native and perhaps the most prominent South Carolina architect of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries—first as a draftsman in Roanoke and Lynchburg, Virginia, and then as a partner in Columbia, South Carolina. From 1902 to about 1908 Edwards formed partnership in Columbia with Missouri native Frank C. Walter (1869-ca. 1955); the firm of Edwards and Walter designed the Abbeville and Lee County courthouses, while Edwards designed the Dillon and Calhoun County courthouses on his own. In 1913 Edwards, by this time practicing architecture in Atlanta, formed a partnership with William J. Sayward (1875-1945), a Vermont native and former employee of McKim, Mead & White of New York; the firm of Edwards and Sayward designed the York and Jasper County courthouses.

The original Sumter District Courthouse, completed in 1821, was designed by William Jay; in 1839 it was remodeled to resemble the designs of Robert Mills, South Carolina's best-known architect renowned for his courthouses and other public buildings.

Although expanded by a rear addition designed by Wilson and Edwards in 1896, shortly after the turn of the twentieth century the courthouse was still too small and Sumter County began plans to build a new building.

In 1905 Sumter County secured a large lot at the corner of Main and Canal Streets. Legislative approval was also obtained for a bond issue and William Augustus Edwards was commissioned to design a new county courthouse for the sum of $85,000.40.

The building that Edwards designed for Sumter County was an I-plan courthouse, set in the center of a deep open block that ran all the way from Main to Harvin Street. The I-plan was a popular design for courthouses all over the country at the end of the nineteenth century and the beginning of the twentieth century. Edwards displayed a strong Beaux-Arts sensibility, however, by setting his courthouse with its long axis parallel to Main Street and putting the recessed entrance portico in the center of the long side. This creates the impression from Main Street that the building is really more of a rectangle with a notch carved out for an entrance. This impression has been much reinforced by the actual filling in of the rear notch in the early 1960s during a remodeling and enlargement of the building, so that it now actually has a rectangular footprint. Edwards's handsome blond-brick courthouse was dedicated on 21 October 1907.

Since its dedication in 1907, the Sumter County courthouse has served the citizens of Sumter County; it has been in continual use for nearly a century. It is also one of Sumter's most aesthetically important structures, and it is a recognizable and familiar downtown landmark.
