DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The New Providence Presbyterian Church occupies a very prominent site on the crest of a ridge that crosses one of the oldest roads in Kentucky, the present U. S. Route 127, which at this point follows the Old Wilderness Road, once the major land route used by the early settlers beginning at the Cumberland Gap and ending at the Falls of the Ohio. The site is only a few miles from the Kentucky River and Shakertown at nearby Pleasant Hill.

The church building, a plain rectangle of implied temple form, lies astride the crest of the ridge, the slopes of its roof echoing the natural slopes on either side. The location, simple substantial massing, and fine proportions of the building lend it a surprising monumentality in keeping with the church's long-standing influence, which extends far beyond the two small rural communities of Salvisa and McAfee it ostensibly serves.

The building is seen from the road, not as a facade, but as a pilastered block, with the broad and fairly high gable the full width of the front. This pediment, which is defined by a rather narrow cornice, is broken only by a louvered lunette placed above center. The three bays of the facade below are divided by plain pilasters with shallow stone capitals and an unusually narrow entablature. The central doorway has a wooden frame with small ears. The flanking windows have plain stone sills and lintels. The ample size of these openings combines with the 8-over-8 pane sash to give the illusion of an over-lifesize scale (the height of the window sills is actually ten feet from the ground). Fine brick walls, laid in Flemish bond, rest on exceptionally finely-cut stone foundations. The side walls have five bays, with chimneys resting above two of the pilasters on each side. The rear wall is similar to the front, but without openings except for a late circular window in the gable. (See photo 2.)

The interior was originally probably (there are no known early photographs or descriptions of the interior), a single large flat-ceilinged room with a gallery at the rear. Apparently about the turn of the century the ceiling was removed, leaving the handsome timbering exposed. The great beams were boxed in, the undersurfaces of the roof sheathed in diagonal tonguein-groove boards, and the balcony cut back and enclosed except for a central opening. Perhaps at the same time the floor was, raked upward from the sanctuary (east end), with short flights of steps carved out of the floor at the two rear entrances. The stairs at either end of the vestibule seem to be original, although the rear part of the balcony cutting across the front windows probably was not.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The New Providence Presbyterian Church is one of the oldest organized Presbyterian churches in the State. The New Providence congregation was organized in 1785 under the leadership of the Reverend David Rice, the first Presbyterian minister to come to Kentucky. New Providence was one of the churches that founded the Transylvania Presbytery in 1786. It was also involved in the founding of the Synod of Kentucky in 1802. The present church was built between 1862 and 1865 and is a fine example of late Greek Revival church architecture.

In 1773 the McAfee party, made up of Joseph, George, and Robert McAfee, James McCoun, and James and Samuel Adams, left Botetourt County, Virginia, to survey land for homes and farms along the Salt River in Kentucky. The Revolutionary War delayed their return with families until 1779. The McAfee party was made up for the most part of Presbyterians, who were organized as a congregation under the Reverend David Rice.

David Rice was born in 1733 in Hanover County, Virginia. He came to Kentucky in 1783. At this time he assembled a congregation at Danville and Cane Run, Kentucky. In his memoirs, included in Bishop's Outline of the History of the Church (1824), Rice records his first impression of religion in Kentucky: "After I had been here some weeks and had preached at several places, I found scarcely one man and but a few women who supported a credible profession of religion" (p. 65). In 1785 Rice preached the first sermon delivered at the Salt River, for the funeral of James McCoun's wife. A year later the congregation was officially organized and named the New Providence Presbyterian Church.

From this time the Church was very active in Presbyterian church affairs. New Providence was one of the churches that formed the Transylvania Presbytery in 1786; Rice was elected moderator of the meeting, which took place in the Danville courthouse in October 1786. The congregation was also involved in the founding of the Synod of Kentucky in 1802. New Providence was in existence four years before the first General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church met in 1789. Through its leadership the congregation was involved in the formation of Transylvania Seminary, the Kentucky

The interior details are plain, although opalescent glass windows and some of the furniture have a more elaborate character. The inside walls have recently been dry-walled because of structural necessity, but great care was taken to preserve the molded sills and so forth in correct relation to the slightly raised surfaces.

Within the past decade the highway has been widened, a brick ranch-style manse erected adjacent to the church, and a diminutive belfry has been erected over the front gable. A large plaque over the entrance is also a recent addition. In spite of these and the earlier interior alterations, the church retains great dignity and harmony. Stylistically it represents the last phase of the Greek Revival country church, as yet uncorrupted (except perhaps in the linear shallowness of pilasters, capitals, and entablature) by the Italianate mode so prevalent after the Civil War during which the New Providence Church was built. Academy at Pisgah, and Centre College (1819), all significant early Kentucky educational institutions.

The New Providence congregation first met in a single log cabin built on the Salt River which was used for both church and school. In 1790 a double log building was built at the present site of Providence Cemetery. This building was expanded a few years later. A third building was constructed of brick at the cemetery site in 1823. In October 1860, land one-half mile east from the cemetery site was purchased from Sarah Ritchie for $100.00 and at this site the fourth and present building was constructed.

The congregation has been involved in two major controversies over the years, but has survived both. The first to occur was the Rankin Schism, relating to church psalmody in 1789. The Reverend Adam Rankin, from Rockbridge County, Virginia, was the first Presbyterian minister to settle north of the Kentucky River. Rankin wanted to use exclusively Rouse's version of the Psalms of David, rather than Isaac Watt's Imitation Scriptural Psalmody. Reverend Cleland as quoted in the Sesqui-Centennial New Providence Presbyterian Church (1934) gives this account of the schism: "The controversy in relation to church psalmody agitated the churches in Kentucky for several years. Reverend Adam Rankin took the lead in this matter by denying the right of communion to all that used Dr. Watt's version of the psalms. The church of New Providence was divided in nearly two equal parts.... Out of this secession was organized what was called the Seceder Church, on the farm of James McCoun, Sr., to which Mr. Rankin preached for several years" (p. 2). Although the schism hindered the growth of the New Providence Church, it eventually died out and caused no permanent damage. The second disagreement was over the controversy of the "New School" and "Old School." Beginning in 1801 there was a period of doctrinal unrest in the Presbyterian Church. Those who held to a strict interpretation of the Standards were called the "Old School," while those who stood for loose interpretation were called the "New School." The controversy eventually led to the erection of two Assemblies. Dr. Cleland, the pastor of New Providence from 1813-1858, followed the "New School Assembly" and was a member of the group in 1850. 1852, and 1854. In 1859 there was union of the two schools, thus bringing an end to the controversy.

The New Providence Church reached its peak in membership in 1865 with
