DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Horseshoe Bend Military Park comprises some 2,040 acres. The terrain varies from uneven or hilly to level. Today it is, for the most part, covered with a forest of mixed pine and hardwood regeneration with a rather dense undergrowth of brush and vines. The Tallapoosa River meanders through the park from northwest to northeast. A U-bend or horseshoe bend in the river forms a peninsula containing about 100 acres. The peninsula is the battleground. Rough, ravine-indented hillsides border the north bank of the river. These wooded hillsides probably look as they did at the time of the battle. The general size and shape of the horseshoe bend and the two islands in the Tallapoosa River have remained relatively unchanged in the 100 years that have elapsed since the battle.

The district is presently maintained to approximate as nearly as possible its appearance at the time of the battle. Land once used extensively by settlers for cultivation of corn and cotton is being allowed to return to timber as it originally existed. Terraces have largely disappeared. The natural reforestation of the hardwoods is encouraged to replace the timber cut by the settlers for lumber and to succeed the loblolly pines subsequently planted and harvested for pulpwood. The scars left on the terrain by sand and gravel pit operations have diminished as a result of vegetative growth. Clearings are maintained where Creek Indians had cleared the timber.

State Hwy. 49 bisects the park in the southwesterly direction. A Visitor Center, maintenance building, and two residences are in close proximity to the highway.

SPECIFIC STRUCTURES AND SITES WITHIN THE DISTRICT

1. HS-#1 Congressional Monument

A granite monument upon a granite base (monument: 89" X 22" X 68"; base: 98" X 31" X 6") erected by authorization of the U.S. Congress in 1918, to commemorate the Battle of Horseshoe Bend. In 1965, the monument was moved approximately 50 feet west of its original location. The monument is in good condition, (early visitors chipped off small pieces of the monument as souvenirs.)

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Horseshoe Bend National Military Park commemorates the last battle of the Creek Indian War of 1813-1814. On March 27, 1814 the forces of General Andrew Jackson defeated warriors of the Creek Indian Nation under Chief Menawa. This decisive victory broke the power of the southern Indians; opened the Old Southwest to white settlement, and established Jackson's reputation nationally as a military leader and Indian fighter. The battle derived its name from the barricades made by the Indians within the U-shaped bend of the Tallapoosa River

The land in this area was originally owned by the Creek Indians, one of the five civilized tribes living in the Southeastern United States. DeSoto found the Creeks in 1540 to be a civilized people, living in towns with houses and farm fields. For 250 years, Spain, France, and England competed for Creek trade. England ultimately became the dominant force and Creek dependence on British goods increased. After the American Revolution, the Creek tribe established relations with the United States and in 1790 signed the Treaty of New York which defined Creek land boundaries and guaranteed American friendship. Many of the Creeks followed the United States program for improving their agriculture and living standards. The Lower Creeks of Georgia lived closer to white settlements and fell under their influence more than did the Upper Creeks of Alabama.

In February 1813, civil war broke out between the Upper and Lower Creeks. Apparent causes were Upper Creek opposition to the white man's program, white squatters on Creek lands, the general advance of the American frontier, and Indian nationalism.

The conflict grew beyond the boundaries of a tribal feud when white settlers became involved. After several futile attempts by Mississippi and Georgia militia to crush the rebellion, the Tennessee militia was mobilized by Andrew Jackson for a full-scale campaign. Despite several setbacks, Jackson's forces were able to push southward to the vicinity of the village of Tohopeka. There, inside the "Horseshoe Bend" of the Tallapoosa River, the Creek warriors waited for battle. They hoped to be protected by the encircling river and a log barricade they had erected across the open end of the peninsula.

Outnumbered by more than three to one, the Creeks suffered a calamitous defeat. As a result, they ceded some 20 million acres of land to the United States. These Creek lands, comprising three-fifths of the present state of Alabama and one-fifth of Georgia, were added to the United States and opened for settlement.

The victory at Horseshoe Bend gained Andrew Jackson national fame and was the first step on the road to the White House. Nine months later he defeated the British at New Orleans, ending the War of 1812. In 1829, he became President, and the following year signed the Indian Removal Bill, forcing all tribes east of the Mississippi River to move to Oklahoma.

2. Daughters of 1812 Monument- HS-#2

A granite monument upon an irregular concrete base (monument: 14" X 7" X 32"; base: 36" X 22" X 4") erected by the U.S. Daughters of 1812 in 1914. The monument is in fair condition with a portion of the top broken off. The monument is significant because it represents the first declaration by Congress that the Battle of Horseshoe Bend was of national significance.

Acreage: Less than .01

Recommended treatment: Preservation and protection as presently engaged in.

Preliminary cost estimate: None

3. Miller Bridge- HS-#3

Originally a wooden, covered bridge erected in 1906-7; now in ruins with only the abutments and four freestanding piers remaining. The abutments are concrete and piers of rock and masonry. The bridge, originally 888 feet long, collapsed in 1963, and the wooden portions were removed. It is the remains of one of the longest covered bridges in the United States.

Acreage: 2

Recommended Treatment: Preservation as needed

Preliminary cost estimate: None

4. Tohopeka Village Site- HS-#4

A temporary refuge village originally containing some 300 houses. The village was burned by Jackson's Cherokee allies during the battle. The site is presently level, grass-covered with scattered trees. It is a tour stop and is kept well mowed and maintained. The site is significant as the location of a temporary refuge town. Here Creek Indians and their families gathered in an effort to concentrate their forces against those of General Andrew Jackson. The wintered here in crude huts while they constructed the barricade across the peninsula.

Significance: 2nd order

UTM Reference: 16/617620/3648200

Acreage: Approximately 100

Recommended Treatment: Preservation and Protection as presently engaged in.

Preliminary Cost: None

5. New Youka Village Site- HS-#5

A permanent village established by the Upper Creeks in 1777. The village was burned a year before the battle. The site is presently a level, grass and brush covered area. It is not accessible to the public and is mowed only occasionally. The actual location of the village site stretches along the river for approximately one mile. UTM references locate the site of the archeological investigation undertaken during the summer of 1973. The town was named for the 1790 Treaty of New York, guaranteeing Creek lands and perpetual friendship with the United States. The village was burned before the battle and its people joined the other refugees at Tohopeka.

Significance: 2nd order

UTM Reference: 16/619970/3649840

Acreage: Approximately 50

Recommended Treatment: Preservation and protection as presently engaged in.

Preliminary Cost Estimate: None

6. Indian Barricade Site-HS-#6

A breastwork constructed by the Creek Indians. It extended some 250 yards across the neck of the peninsula and varied in height from 5 to 8 feet. The barricade was composed of large logs laid upon each other. The site is presently a cleared, grass-covered area. It is a tour stop and is kept mowed and well maintained. It was behind this barricade that the Creek Indians faced the assault of Andrew Jackson's forces. Here more than 900 warriors died--roughly 95 percent of all the Red Stick warriors present.

Significance: 2nd Order
