The McIntosh County Courthouse is significant because it is a local landmark for the small county seat of Eufaula and because it serves the needs of the surrounding area as the center of county government. It is a good example of a simple and functional public building designed by one of the architectural partnerships headed by Solomon Andrew Layton. Political events of McIntosh County have been focused on the courthouse in Eufaula since the building was completed in 1926. The building is in good condition and is typical of several Oklahoma county courthouses in its architectural style.
