DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Cato Methodist Church, a small frame structure of simple lines, was constructed in 1880 under the direction of a local contractor named Wilkerson. The present frame building replaced a log church which was built about 1872 and burned in 1880.

Originally the church was of two storeys with a steep gable roof and boxed cornices with returns. The upper floor was used by the local Masonic Lodge and the lower floor housed the Methodist congregation. In 1945 the upper storey was removed.

The present structure is one storey and measures approximately 30 feet x 60 feet. The building is sheathed in its original clapboard and has a low-pitch gable roof with exposed rafters. Projecting above the ridge line at the east end of the roof is a small bell tower with a high hip roof and a wooden finial.

The simple lines of the building are broken only by door and window openings. Both the north and south elevations have four double-hung windows set in simple wood frames. Two separate entries are symmetrically situated on the east elevation, and originally provided separate access for the men and the women and children. Plain wooden porches with low gable roofs and exposed rafters cover these twin entries. Like the bell tower, these porches were added during the 1945 remodeling of the church.

The simplicity of the structure is continued on the interior. The single open room is lined with narrow flushboard above vertically paneled wainscot. Simple moulding surrounds the window and door openings. The original floor was covered in 1945 with narrow planks set in a diagonal pattern. Aisles leading from each entry divide the simple pews of wideplank pine into three sections. A small raised platform with railing projects from the west wall and encloses the minister's pulpit.

Lying due south of the church is the cemetery. Enclosed by a wire fence, this grassy area contains a large number of simple gravestones and monuments erected in the cemetery during the past century.

This simple church and cemetery, still on the original site, represents a significant part of rural Arkansas history.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This old church was organized in 1872 by the first settlers who moved to the southern Faulkner County/northern Pulaski County area just after the War Between the States. It was the typical Methodist Circuit Rider's Church and was on the same circuit with several other churches.

The Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad Company donated and deeded the property to the trustees, John J. Jaggers, Noel Beasley and William D. Springer, of the Frenchman Mountain Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and their successors and assigns forever in a deed dated May 2, 1874. Its cemetery dated back to 1873 when Mrs. Watt Caples was buried there. The first church building was a log structure, but it was lost by fire in 1880. The present building, which originally contained an upper storey as a Masonic Lodge, was built in the style of the 1880's in rural Arkansas

The church was remodeled in 1945 and the upper storey removed. The original interior is still complete with pine pews that contain boards as wide as 24 inches. The original two separate front entrances were retained when the church was remodeled, one for the men and one for the women and children.

For 90 years, the church served as the community center for the Cato community, which is one of the oldest settlements in Faulkner and Pulaski Counties. When the Camp Robinson reservation was taken over by the army in 1940, it left the church in a small pocket and the community of Cato cutoff from its direct routes to North Little Rock. Indeed, it forced the largest group of families that supported the church and community out of the area entirely. The church then declined and is now inactive except for occasional fellowship services and for the annual "Homecoming" held each first Sunday in June. At this annual event money is raised to maintain the old building and cemetery, which are in good condition at present. The property is in the charge of four trustees who are appointed by the Charge Conference of the Bethel United Methodist Church located about 4 miles east of Cato.

The chairman of the trustees has a file containing all the church rolls and "Quarterly Conference" records back as far as 1873. The Daughters of the American Revolution has copied these books of records and cross-indexed the names of the members in those early days.

Although revered as a shrine in the hearts of all those who worshiped there or whose ancestors did and spoke so many times of the little white church, the main historical significance of the old church and cemetery is that it is a rare and perfect example of the old circuit rider's church which was so very important in settling this part of the United States, and indeed the whole country.
