Narrative Description

The Goosetown Historic District encompasses 41 full residential blocks, 3 2/3-blocks, 12 1/2-blocks, 4 1/4-blocks and the 51-Lot Birch Hill Allotment in the community of Anaconda, Montana. The district includes all of the Eastern Addition and the Birch Hill Allotment, and parts of the small Eastern-to-the-Eastern and Alder additions. It contains 1,736 buildings and outbuildings, including a number of brick commercial buildings, and four ethnic churches. The district as a whole represents one of the finest working-class neighborhoods in Montana. Its narrow lots, numerous rear cabins and residences, boardinghouses, neighborhood saloons and grocery stores, and strong and diverse ethnic identity express feelings of cultural individuality and economic solidarity common to the blue-collar neighborhoods of urban communities. The streets in this district are commonly arranged in blocks 300' square, with most of the 20' by 300' alleys running east to west. Most blocks are divided into twenty-four 25' by 140' lots. The streets contain a diverse grouping of late 19th-century and early 20th-century residences, an eclectic combination of styles representing the evolution of Anaconda's less-elaborate residential building forms throughout the historic period from 1883-1945.

Most of the residences in the district were constructed between 1883 and 1910. Many of the larger dwellings have complex plans, often with bay windows, dormers, scrollwork, and leaded and stained glass windows; however, most residences are modest with simple plans. Residences constructed during the 1880s and 1890s predominantly took on three forms: gable-front, gable-front and wing, or hipped-cottage, often with a gabled-bay front. By the late 1900s and early 1910s, the Craftsman style began to appear in the Goosetown neighborhood, most commonly taking a side-gable bungalow form with engaged porch. A number of post-1900 residences in this district exhibit the high level of craftsmanship that is associated with the Craftsman architectural style. Almost all of the dwellings constructed prior to World War I featured a front porch, often full-width in massing. Rear porches were also common. A variety of stylistic details, generally from the Queen Anne and Craftsman styles, were freely borrowed and combined, sometimes after numerous historic remodels, to embellish the modest forms.

Foundations of sandstone and granite (many later parged with concrete), are evident under many of the homes. Concrete foundations became standard between approximately 1907 and 1910 in Anaconda. Dwellings were generally of frame construction with weatherboard and clapboard siding. Only a few of the buildings are composed of brick, a more expensive building material, even though brick manufacturing plants were located in town. Residences of the 1920s and 1930s reflect a scaling-down of stylistic design. Fewer architectural details embellish homes built during this time period, and forms often take on a simple, rectangular plan. Attached garages began to appear during this construction period.

In general, the streetscapes within this district do not reflect architecturally homogeneous views. A typical block contains examples of several one-story Queen Anne-style gable-front and wing homes, or hipped cottages with gabled-bay-fronts; one larger front-gabled residence, a few 1½-story Craftsman-style gable-front and side-gable bungalows; a few vernacular gable-front cottages with full-width front porches; and several vernacular rear residences. The latter usually took a shotgun or side-gabled form with relatively little ornamentation except for corner boards and exposed rafter tails. The blocks retain a relatively cohesive appearance due to the common lot frontage, similarity of scale, and the uniformity of the level streets laid on a grid pattern.

During the historic period, the district appeared somewhat different than it does today. Although few residences currently retain a front yard fence, a majority of the residences had a picket, wood rail, or cast-iron fence during the historic period, usually surrounding the entire property. Front yards typically featured more trees and flower beds, while rear yards were utilized for vegetable gardens, chicken coops, wood sheds, outhouses, bachelor cabins, and barns/carriage houses. Wooden walks accessed the front entrance of homes from the street. Today, front fences have been entirely removed, and rear fences are generally wood plank. Manicured lawns replace the historic landscaping in front and rear yards. Many of the rear outbuildings have been demolished or refurbished for other uses, especially barns/carriage houses and rear residences, which were often converted into garages. Smaller historic garages and some modern, shallow-gabled garages appear at the rear of the lots. The original shade trees that lined the boulevards between the walkways/sidewalks and the street have been removed. Wooden walkways were replaced during the late 1930s with concrete sidewalks.

The level of historic architectural integrity varies throughout the Goosetown Historic District. A number of residences have been re-sided with modern materials and almost all of the original Late Victorian trim, which characterized the cottages in this neighborhood, has been removed. Wood shingle roofs have generally been replaced with asphalt shingle, rolled asphalt composition, or metal roofs.

Many of the original open front porches have been altered with concrete bases and partially enclosed. But most retain some elements of their original form, such as porch posts and supports. Many residences have modern replacement windows of incompatible size and scale. Several residences also have large additions (some built after the historic period). Most of these additions were either built to match the original form and style of the house, or were constructed on a non-primary elevation, and therefore, do not detract from the overall integrity of the street scape. Most dwellings retain original form and massing in combination with some original detailing or have a continuity of period form and style or a common builder with adjacent residences which all render a property a contributing status. In general, the overall historic and architectural rhythms and character of the Goosetown Historic District remain intact. The district, therefore, adequately conveys the feeling and associations of the significant historic period.

The district boundary is roughly defined on the north by East Commercial Avenue, on the west by Chestnut Street, on the south by East Eighth Street, the Birch Hill Allotment, and East Sixth Street, and on the east by Monroe Street. Unfortunately, more than half of the known, architect-designed resources in this district have been demolished. But a number of other significant properties remain, lending character to and anchoring this district. The following description highlights all ten properties of primary architectural significance.

The massive Washoe Brewery at 1200 East Park, designed and built by the contracting firm of Johnson and Law, anchors the northeast corner of the Goosetown Historic District. Built in 1905, this 4-story manufacturing facility features a Commercial style that borrows heavily from Italian Renaissance and Romanesque designs. The building features a dominating 4-story corner tower, with round, arched window openings and a heavy brick cornice. "Washoe Brew Co." is carved in terra cotta relief on the south elevation of the tower, while the construction date of 1905 in metal lettering is affixed to the stepped parapet wall. Architectural detailing includes tall door and window openings, the heavy brick cornice, the flat roof line and the round-arched, upper story windows. The corner tower is typical of a mill/industrial-processing plant. An adjacent brick office building originally served as a boardinghouse for brewery workers. Although this building has incompatible replacement windows, the masonry work on the building clearly contributes to the historic feeling of the building. A large rear frame stable, placed fronting onto East Commercial Avenue, and incorporating numerous historic additions, contributes to the integrity of the facility.

The Washoe Brewery is one of many industrial processing sites that bounds or originally did bound the Goosetown neighborhood. Others included the Anaconda Company Foundry on the south side of the district and the two original Anaconda Company smelter sites, originally located north of the district, across the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific railroad tracks. The Washoe Brewery is the only surviving industrial plant in Anaconda that is not associated with the Anaconda Company.

Anchoring the southwest corner of the district is the Beaudette Block at 621 East Park. The Beaudette Block was constructed in 1908 and is an excellent example of a Commercial building with Queen Anne detailing. This commercial/residential building originally functioned as a combination barber shop and rooming house. Emil Beaudette originally operated the barber shop in the lower northwest corner of the building. His family lived in the remaining part of the lower level, and his wife operated a roominghouse out of the upstairs of the home. The block is distinctive with its original 1-over-1 double-hung windows, partial cast-iron store front, original doors, heavy brick cornice, stained glass, and recessed entry. The name and construction date of the building is carved in terra cotta relief on the parapet wall.

A similar brick block that historically displayed both commercial and residential uses was the Anaconda Meat and Grocery Company at 800 East Park. This Commercial-style brick-front building was constructed in 1920 as a combination grocery store, meat shop, automobile dealership, and apartment house. The building was touted as fireproof when originally constructed, with its thick cement floors and pressed brick walls. Some of the original window units have been replaced, as has the store front. However, these alterations, with some minor exceptions, occurred during the historic period.

Across the street from the Anaconda Meat and Grocery Company Block is the Club Moderne saloon at 801 East Park. This Art Moderne-style tavern was designed by renowned Montana architect Fred Willson and built in 1937. It has been listed in the National Register of Historic Places since 1986 and is the only National Register-listed property in the district. The $25,000 Depression-era structure is characterized by its rounded corners, flat roof, smooth wall finish with carrara glass panels, circular windows and illuminative neon signs. The interior, as well, retains an Art Moderne style with its "Nu-wood," chromium, and leather materials.

Although fourteen boardinghouses served this neighborhood during the historic period, only one remains in an original enough state to render it of primary architectural significance. The Gustafson Boardinghouse at 924 East Fifth was designed and built in 1895 by contractor Ed Westerson. Located within one block of the Anaconda Foundry Department, it was one of the primary boardinghouses in Anaconda for Scandinavian immigrants and Foundry employees. The boardinghouse reflects Queen Anne influences, including the wood spindling on the side porch (east elevation) which historically served and continues to serve as the main entrance to the home, hand-carved doors with Queen Anne windows, and a brick cornice. The mansard roof suggests some French Second Empire influencing as well. Although a historic front porch has been replaced and non-historic shutters have been added, the building still retains most of its original detailing and landscaping. A rear carriage house remains, which evolved into a rear residence around the turn of the century and then into a garage during the 1920s.

Four ethnic churches and two church-related residences exist in the Goosetown neighborhood, achieving primary significance because of their architectural and historical importance to the neighborhood. The St. Peter Austrian Roman Catholic Church, designed by Anaconda architect W. W. Hyslop in an elaborate High Victorian Gothic style, was built in 1898. Two multi-family residences in the Goosetown District were originally associated with St. Peter's parish. These are the Second Gothic Revival-style brick Rectory next door to the church at 405 Alder, built in 1904, and the Colonial Revival-style Sisters' Residence at 709 East Third built in 1922. The rectory is a brick-front multiple dwelling with such Gothic detailing as Gothic-arched windows and a porch with wooden trefoil carvings. The Sisters' Residence is also a brick-front multiple dwelling. It was designed by Fred Willson and features such Colonial Revival detailing as a central vestibule, flat-brick relieving arches and 6-over-6 double-hung windows in a regular fenestration.

Besides St. Peter's and associated residences, three other ethnic churches appear in the Goosetown Historic District. All display primary architectural significance and represent the diverse immigrant groups who settled in Anaconda's colorful working-class neighborhood. The Free Swedish Mission Church at 501 Alder, now abandoned, was constructed by contractor John Carlin in 1899 for dissenters of the State Lutheran Church of Sweden. The church is the only remaining frame first-generation church in Anaconda and features a Second Gothic Revival style. The Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church at 424 Chestnut was constructed in 1927, replacing an original brick church that had burned down that year. This Carpenter Gothic Revival-style church is the only other frame church in Anaconda. The Serbian Church Home at 921 East Park was constructed for Serbian Orthodox parishioners in 1940. This 1-story brick Colonial Revival-Eclectic Church features original sets of 10-light casement windows in a regular fenestration and a unique, wide wood door with a fan-light.

The Goosetown Historic District contains the following property types: Residences and Associated Outbuildings, Architect-designed Buildings, Resources Associated with Commerce, Resources Associated with Industry, Resources Associated with Social and Cultural Development, and Resources Associated with Transportation.

Narrative Statement of Significance

The Goosetown Historic District encompasses that neighborhood in Anaconda known fondly by town residents as "Goosetown." Following the historic boundaries of the neighborhood, the district includes the heart of Anaconda's historic working-class and ethnic communities. Well-preserved modest workers' cottages, a few brick commercial blocks, and several ethnic-affiliated churches characterize the neighborhood.

The Goosetown Historic District qualifies for listing in the National Register of Historic Places according to Criterion C, through its representative architectural values. Most Goosetown residences were built between 1883 and 1910, and exhibit a variety of architectural styles, including Italianate, Queen Anne, Shingle, Second Gothic Revival, Colonial Revival, Prairie School, Commercial, Craftsman, and Art Moderne. A number of residences also exemplify the work of architects active locally during the historic period.

The Goosetown Historic District is equally significant for Register listing according to Criterion A, through properties having important associations with local historical patterns, including the historic contexts of Early Settlement and Community Development, Transportation, Ethnic Heritage, Community Planning and Development, Development of Commerce and Industry, Architect-designed Buildings, and Social and Cultural Development.

In Goosetown, vestiges of some of Anaconda's earliest settlement remain on the historic east side. When the Eastern Addition was opened to residential development in 1895, immigrants flocked to the neighborhood to buy the small, but cheap, lots, building rows of functional workers' cottages. As a whole, these cottages represent the establishment of a distinct working class neighborhood, while groups of early residences depict patterns of Anaconda planning and development.

Goosetown itself was physically linked to the Anaconda Company, and district properties symbolize the essential importance of the smelting industry to area residents. In addition, properties such as the Washoe Brewery reflect the industrial environment outside of the dominating Anaconda Company, while Goosetown businesses, including stores, saloons and hotels, reflect a broad range of commercial activities in Anaconda.

Religious properties in the Goosetown Historic District trace local history and provide important links to Anaconda's ethnic heritage. The many ethnic-affiliated churches in this neighborhood served as social organizing vehicles that contributed to and strengthened the foundations of a diverse ethnic community.

Historic themes of transportation are represented by resources associated with the streetcar system in Anaconda. Although no original tracks remain, the cast iron street lights with overhead wire clips for the streetcars' electric wires line the length of East Third Street, and the second of three sets of storage facilities for the street cars also survives in the district.

Two surviving World War I barracks located in Goosetown represent the only documented role of the United States military in Anaconda. A major producer for the war effort during World War I, the Anaconda Company was considered a potential enemy target. Army guards were stationed at the smelter and were housed in the barracks on Monroe Street.

The Goosetown Historic District's period of significance runs from 1883 (Anaconda's founding date) to 1945 (the end of World War II). Significant dates are 1895 (construction of the Gustafson Boarding House), 1898 (construction of St. Peter's Austrian Roman Catholic Church), 1899 (construction of the Free Swedish Mission Church), 1904 (construction of St. Peter's Rectory), 1905 (construction of the Wahoe Brewery), 1908 (construction of the Beaudette Block), 1920 (construction of the Anaconda Meat and Grocery Company Block), 1927 (construction of Our Savior's Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church), and 1940 (construction of the Serbian Church Home). The ending date of 1945 reflects the end of World War II and the slow-down of construction in the Goosetown district. By 1945, most new residential construction was occurring west of the Original Townsite of Anaconda in a number of additions annexed by the City.

Associations with Historic Patterns

The district qualifies under National Register Criterion A because it reflects the patterns of growth and development of Anaconda between the years 1883-1945. Goosetown encompasses a portion of the Original Townsite, platted in 1883, and some of the town's earliest surviving residences, such as the log cabin at 711 East Eighth. Constructed in approximately 1883, it was purportedly home to a Chinese gardener and his family who tended gardens east of Birch Street. Early residences are especially found in the northwest section of the district. The early development of blocks on Front Street and the north ends of Chestnut, Birch and Alder Streets reflects their proximity to the core of the early commercial/residential district along Front Street on Anaconda's north side. Anaconda's population quickly spread south and eastward during the late 1880s, and a number of small residences began appearing on the far east side of town, near the streets of Madison, Jefferson, and Monroe. By 1895, the east end of Goosetown was annexed as the Eastern Addition, which included sixty-six blocks on 180 acres. The houses located on Birch Hill, above the southeast corner of the Original Townsite, were annexed as a 51-lot Allotment in 1898.

Although a few of the earliest residences in the Goosetown neighborhood were of brick construction, the majority of houses were wood frame. Groups of early residences, such as the three identical cottages located at 711-715 East Fourth Street reflect patterns of construction and neighborhood development. Goosetown home typically featured simple plans and modest architectural detailing, generally visible only on front porches. Over twenty-five percent of the primary residences in Goosetown also had one or more rear residences, tenement houses, or bachelor cabins, usually located at the rear of the lot. These rear houses commonly exhibited only one or two rooms, a rectangular plan, and a gabled roof. Few displayed more architectural detailing than cursory corner boards and large wood window and door surrounds. Of these rear houses, most were built during the 1890s; several remain, but most were demolished during more recent times or converted to outbuildings.

The district is also eligible for listing on the National Register because of its association with the development of industry in Anaconda. The district is directly adjacent to the original Tuttle Manufacturing and Supply Company (the Anaconda Foundry Department) and the original Washoe Works sites. The district also hosts the large Washoe Brewery building at 1200 East Park Avenue. Built in 1905, the Washoe Brewery reflects the expansion of the brewing industry in Anaconda, despite a shut-down period between 1905 and 1933. It is the last remaining industrial facility of its kind in Anaconda, although it was preceded by other breweries in the town, including Chris Nissler's short-lived enterprise on Main Street in 1885, Robert Fenner's Brewery on East Third Street, and the well-known Anaconda Brewing Company Complex on the 700 Block of West Fourth Street. The Washoe Brewery produced Rocky Mountain Beer between 1933 and 1955, when the company was forced out of business. Since 1955, the building, which still retains some of the original equipment, has been occupied by a number of different tenants. It is currently vacant.

The development of transportation in Anaconda is also reflected by buildings and structures in the Goosetown Historic District, specifically the Anaconda Street Railway Barn at 807 East Commercial, and the East Third Street streetlights, which display the pole extensions for street railway electrical lines. The East Commercial Street barn was constructed by local brick mason (and 1892-1893 Anaconda mayor) Daniel Dwyer in 1892. The barns were the second set constructed for the Railway, replacing the original brick barns in Washoe Park. The modified East Third Street street lamps (part of the Anaconda Historic Lighting District) were installed by 1920, allowing lighted access from Goosetown to the Anaconda Company industrial sites east of Anaconda.

The Goosetown Historic District also meets Criterion A for its associations with the broad patterns of development in Anaconda's religious, social/cultural and ethnic communities. Home to immigrant, blue-collar laborers who worked for the Anaconda Company, the Goosetown neighborhood attracted immigrant workers because of its proximity to Anaconda's industrial sites (especially after the Reduction Works was moved from the north side of the Warm Springs drainage to its present location southeast of Anaconda). In addition, the land east of the Original Townsite was parceled into small, sometimes irregularly-shaped lots, which were priced more cheaply than the regular 50' by 140' lots located in the Original Townsite. Once the diverse ethnic composition of Goosetown was established, the neighborhood was even more attractive to the immigrant working-class, who sought comradeship in cultural traditions and economic backgrounds. The neighborhood did not develop enclaves, but remained a potpourri of ethnic groups bound by their religious and cultural organization.

Numerous ethnic groups were represented in the community, and subsequently, their various cultural practices are reflected by a variety of religious, social and commercial establishments in the district.¹ Foremost were the churches which derived their significance from their roles as social organizing centers for the many different ethnic groups in Goosetown. Four ethnic churches remain in the Goosetown Historic District: St. Peter's Austrian Roman Catholic Church, built in 1898; the Free Swedish Mission Church, built in 1899; the Our Savior's Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church, rebuilt in 1927; and the Serbian Church Home, built in 1940.

Of all of the ethnic-affiliated churches in the Goosetown neighborhood, only St. Peter's Austrian Roman Catholic Church is significant for its associations with the development of local religion and establishment of religion-related facilities. Because of the large population of Roman Catholics in Anaconda, the establishment of St. Peter's as an alternative parish to the overcrowded and Irish-dominated St. Paul's parish on East Park Avenue had a significant impact on Goosetown. Large numbers of Austrian Roman Catholics began attending St. Peter's, and local Austrian celebrations, especially Mesopust, became more conspicuous, highlighting the cultural traditions of many members of the Goosetown community. Yet, the church also made members with other ethnic backgrounds feel welcome, establishing the parish as not only a church for Austrian Catholics, but for all Goosetown Catholics. Members of St. Peter's Church also had a significant impact on the educational system in Anaconda, working with St. Peter's parish to establish a local parochial school system between 1902 and 1908, and integrating church activities with educational, cultural and social events.²

Although St. Peter's Church at 401 Alder held historical/ethnic associations with Goosetown's Austrian (generally Croatian and Slovenian) Roman Catholics, offering masses in the Serbo-Croatian language, it generally served as the Catholic parish for Anaconda's east side residents. The Church did actively sponsor and participate in Austrian-observed holidays and celebrations, working closely with the St. Peter and Paul Society, one of the four Austrian fraternities in town. Yet it also recognized its diverse congregation and offered non-ethnic affiliated activities.

The Free Swedish Mission was constructed at 501 Alder for a group of Swedish Lutheran dissenters. It, too, offered services in the native Swedish tongue, and promulgated cultural activities significant to Swedish heritage. Likewise, the Norwegian Lutheran ² In 1908, the parish established its own school, St. Peter's School, across the street from the church at 323 Alder Street.

Church offered services in the Norwegian language (all of the records remain untranslated in the Norwegian tongue) and sustained the large Norwegian Lutheran community in Anaconda. An original brick Norwegian Lutheran church at 424 Chestnut was built in 1904, but burned to the ground in 1927. It was immediately rebuilt. Our Savior's also opened its doors to other Lutheran sects, including a small German Lutheran congregation in Anaconda that could not afford its own church.

One of the smaller congregations in Anaconda, the Serbian Orthodox parish, launched a fund-raising effort in early 1940 and constructed a Colonial Revival - Eclectic-styled church home. Built as a combination church and social center, the Serbian Church Home at 921 East Park was a vital cultural link for the development of Anaconda's Serbian Orthodox community.

Like its religious/cultural history, Goosetown's social history is intricately intertwined with its diverse ethnic community. Because the working-class shared a common economic background, the neighborhood remained a mixture. Yet social organization was relatively strict as ethnic groups closely guarded their cultural practices through their fraternal organizations and, to a lesser extent, through their solicitation of some businesses. The most conspicuous social element of the Goosetown District is the French Hall at 500 East Fourth. Although the building does not retain architectural integrity, beyond its false-front form, historically it was home to French-Canadian and Croatian fraternities for at least seventy years. Boardinghouses also tended to organize along ethnic lines. Fourteen boardinghouses have been identified in the Goosetown Historic District, all of which appear to have housed, predominantly, boarders of one ethnic group. For example, the Gustafson Boardinghouse at 924 East Fifth generally housed single Swedish men who worked nearby at the Anaconda Foundry. The Kelliher Bakery and Boardinghouse at 521 East Third primarily catered to Irish bachelors; and Jacob and Annie Laslovich's boardinghouse at 310 Alder housed lodgers from Austria (commonly Croatia and Montenegro.) Similarly, a number of bars along the East Third Street streetcar lines were organized along ethnic lines, including the Sladich Bar at 600 East Third (Croatian), the Daly and Walsh Saloon at 517 East Third (Irish) and the Charles Lindberg Saloon at 227 Chestnut (Swedish).³ Although none of these commercial establishments discriminated in any way, they did attract particular ethnic groups.

During the 1910s, residential construction in the Goosetown historic district continued to flourish, although not as greatly as during the first twenty-five years of Anaconda's existence. Most residences constructed during this period reflect the Craftsman style. After World War I, new additions both east and west of Goosetown contributed to a reduction in construction in Goosetown. Slightly larger residences with less architectural detailing began infilling vacant lots in the district. And near the end of the historic period, a number of the larger dwellings were divided into apartments, while large boardinghouses either closed or were remodeled to provide self-sufficient apartment units. By 1945, most of the lots in Goosetown had been developed, resulting in a low number of modern intrusions.

Architectural Significance

The Goosetown Historic District is significant under Criterion C of the National Register of Historic Places with most of the residences and buildings in this district achieving significance as part of a larger whole. The buildings in this district form a distinctive immigrant working-class neighborhood comprised of modest Late Victorian and early 20th century cottages and bungalows. The buildings and residences constructed prior to the end of World War II are distinctive in form, massing, and design and establish strong working class historic building patterns and rhythms of the district. Although only three buildings in the district have documented architects, many others reflect the design skills and craftsmanship of Anaconda's contractors. The three Goosetown buildings with known architects include: St. Peter's Church at 401 Alder designed by W. W. Hyslop; the Sisters' Residence at 709 East Third and the Club Moderne saloon at 801 East Park, both designed by Fred Willson. Hyslop, an architect in residence in Anaconda between 1894 and approximately 1900, designed a large number of buildings in Anaconda during the 1890s. He was the most popular architect of the time, although few of his buildings survive. Elsewhere in town, Hyslop's surviving designs include the Church of Christ at 520 Oak (built in 1895), the Alpine Apartments at 210 Hickory in the West Side Historic District (built in 1915), and the Lorraine Apartments at 220 East Third Street (built in 1915).

Although Fred Willson never resided in Anaconda, he designed a large number of buildings in town between 1913 and 1945. In addition to the construction of the Sisters' residence and the Club Moderne, Willson remodelled the Bolkovatz Building, a brick commercial block at 601-603 East Park in 1923. Other local examples of his work include the Daly Bank Annex at the rear of 123 Main, the Nels Pierson garage at 201 East Commercial, and the B. F. Mahan Store facade remodel at 119 Main (1916) in the Commercial Historic District; and the Daly Gymnasium annex at the rear of 408 Main (1915), the Spellman Residence at 702 Locust (1914), and the Brentwood Apartments at 520 Main (1918), all in the West Side Historic District.

Criteria Considerations

Criteria Consideration A applies to the Goosetown Historic District because of the numbers of religious properties deriving significance from architectural distinction, historical importance and ethnic association. All four churches in this district and the two church-related properties are of primary significance: St. Peter's Austrian Roman Catholic Church, the Free Swedish Mission Church, Our Saviour's Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church, the Serbian Church Home, St. Peter's Rectory, and St. Peter's Sisters' Residence. Two of these buildings have documented architects; architects for the others remain unidentified. Each property is a unique example of either Gothic Revival or Colonial Revival architecture and contributes to the social history of the Goosetown neighborhood.

Although a number of Goosetown residences appear to have been moved in from the suburb of Carroll just after the turn of the century, none were formally documented by either the Anaconda Company, the local newspapers or the owners. Several owners mistakenly identify their properties as residences moved into town from Carroll, but research using newspaper accounts and Sanborn maps has proved otherwise. Therefore, no other criteria considerations apply to the buildings and residences within the Goosetown Historic District.

Boundary Justification

The Goosetown Historic District includes approximately fifty-one blocks and the 51-lot Birch Hill Allotment of Anaconda. The district incorporates most of Anaconda's historic eastside neighborhood, and district boundaries were drawn using the historic boundaries of the Goosetown neighborhood, as specified in numerous oral histories and newspaper accounts. The 500 block of East Park Avenue is excluded from this largely-residential district because of its commercial streetscape; it is instead included in the Anaconda Commercial Historic District, which is located northwest of the Goosetown District. East Front Street is not included within this district because it lacks sufficient architectural integrity, as do properties located in the blocks west of N-S alley between Chestnut and Oak Streets.
