The main dwelling is a frame, side passage, double-pile house with additions on both gable ends. It is a result of four periods of construction, spanning the 19th and early 20th centuries. To the rear, south of the main dwelling, are situated several outbuildings including a frame summer kitchen, a stone and frame icehouse, a frame, brick and stone springhouse/dairy, a frame privy, chicken house, tool shed and corncrib, a large frame stable, and a frame tenant house. All of these buildings contribute to the significance of the resource.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION

The principal dwelling is situated facing north, on a hill overlooking Severn Chapel Road. The 2½ story side passage, double pile plan main block is centrally placed with two 1½ story wings of similar proportions extending from both the east and west gable ends. The main block dates from c. 1840, while two bays of the west wing which abut the main block are said to be an earlier dwelling. Three additional bays were added to the west end of this section sometime in the late 19th century. The east wing was added in 1974 to balance and complement the west wing.

The house rests on a stone foundation and is covered predominately with weatherboard siding. German siding covers the first story facade under the porch and the facade of the west wing. The roof of each section is covered with asphalt shingles. Pairs of pitched roof dormers protrude from the roof of each section, both on the facade and the rear (south) elevation. A one-story hip-roof porch runs almost completely across the facade of the dwelling. It is supported by simple tapered square posts. A triangular pediment breaks the porch roofline marking the entrance to the main block.

Two interior gable end chimneys are located at the east end of the main block. The earlier portion of the west wing is marked by an interior chimney which has been raised to give it more height. Another interior gable end chimney marks the west end of the west wing.

The rear of the entire house has been altered with the addition of enclosed shed additions on each section.

The windows are predominately 6/6 sash with aluminum storm windows. Large 32-pane, floor to ceiling casement windows have been added on the facade in the first story of the main block and in two bays of both the west and east wings.

The principal entrance is located at the west end of the main block. A wide 6-panel wooden door opens into the side passage which contains the stair. It is located at the rear of the passage and rises to the second story against the west wall. A single room (originally partitioned into two) opens off the side passage on the first floor. The two mantels in this room date from the mid-19th century.

The interior in both sections of the west wing has been modernized to accommodate a dining area and kitchen.

A number of outbuildings associated with this site are of special note. A board and batten summer kitchen stands just south of the west wing and is connected to it by an open passageway. The entrance into the summer kitchen is at the north gable end. An interior chimney with a clay stovepipe emerges from the south gable end. The interior is presently used for storage. The loft space is whitewashed. Extending from the south gable end of the summer kitchen is a later and smaller wing which functions as the pumphouse.

Directly west and across the driveway from the house is a masonry and board and batten icehouse. Access is gained through an enclosed portico extending from the east gable end. Steps lead down into a large space which is partitioned by a curved masonry wall. The high ceiling consists of a series of brick vaults supported with iron metal joists. The smaller space has a poured concrete floor with a trough. The frame loft space above this area is accessed from the rear, west elevation. The rafters are mitred together. A small ventilator pierces the gable roof.

South of the summer kitchen is a low stone, brick and frame springhouse/dairy. It is constructed in two separate sections with an open passageway in between, all covered by the same gable roof. The western section is a brick-walled collecting pool for the spring which emerges from the ground in this area. A heavy hand-hewn frame which rests on the brick foundation walls of the pool is enclosed with wooden lattice and weatherboard siding. The water in the pool is channelled through a pipe which runs under the passageway and into the stone constructed dairy section. It is directed into a trough which runs around the inside of the walls and is dispersed into the stream emerging from the east end of the building. Evidence of wrought nails in the plate of this building may indicate that it is, with some renovations, a late 18th or early 19th century outbuilding.

The frame privy stands south of the icehouse. It is covered with German siding and has a pyramidal roof. There is a double entrance on the east elevation.

A large and elaborate frame stable stands southwest of the house. It was constructed in 1902, which is clearly marked on a decorative jig-sawn arched ventilator located on the facade, east, gable end. The interior of the stable is intact, and consists of narrow beaded board paneling throughout, with red oak standing stalls for horses, marked by large square wooden posts with pedimented finials. A recent, large enclosed concrete block shed addition extends from the north elevation of the stable. Inside this addition, the present owners have incorporated an early boundary stone into the foundation. It reads: "S. Boundary/ of Brandy/ 1790." Brandy, owned by the Warfields, was a tract which bordered Abington on the northwest. The loft space above the stable was finished and served as living quarters for the coachman.

HISTORY AND SUPPORT

The tract known as "Abington," on which Abbington Farm is situated, was patented to John Gather and Robert Proctor in 1664. At Gather's death in 1705, his son John Jr. inherited the Abington plantation.¹

One of John Jr.'s sons, Rezin Gaither, lived at Abington and married his housekeeper, Sarah Yieldhall, late in life.² He is assessed in the 1798 Federal Direct Tax with 150 acres of land, improved by one 40 X 20 foot dwelling and one cornhouse measuring 12 X 20 feet. (Neither of these structures survives, unless a portion of the dwelling was incorporated into the west wing of the present dwelling.)

In 1807, Gaither died intestate and heavily in debt to Mary Weems for 343 pounds, 6 shillings, and 6 pence. A long court proceeding followed, involving John Gaither, the son of Rezin, vs. Mary Weems. It resulted in 1815 with the purchase of the Abington Plantation, at a discount, by Anne Weems, the daughter of Mary Weems. The legal land transaction took place the following year in 1816, by which time Anne Weems had married Horatio Ridout of "White Hall."³

In 1837, Rignal D. Woodward purchased the property for $779.40 from Anne, John and Dr. John Ridout, the widow, son and nephew, respectively, of Horatio Ridout who died in 1834.⁴

The two-story, side passage, double pile plan main block was probably built by Rignal D. Woodward shortly after he purchased the property. Woodward was a planter, served as sheriff, and presiding Justice of the Orphans Court. In 1888, he died and the 198 acre Abington Farm was sold to pay debts. It was purchased by his son, Rignal T. Woodward, who was a partner in Woodward, Baldwin and Company, the prosperous Baltimore textile commission house. The progenitor of this company was the William Woodward Company, founded by William Woodward, brother of Rignal D. Woodward.⁵

At Rignal T.'s death in 1905, the property passed to his children, Elijah, Christopher H.R., and Mary of New York City, and Charles of Anne Arundel County. They mortgaged the property in 1913 and defaulted in 1928, at which time it was sold and purchased by the Title Guarantee and Trust Company of Baltimore.⁶ In 1931, it was sold to John Tevis Harwood of Baltimore, who sold it in 1935 to Benjamin and Bertha McCloskey. In 1944 Bertha McCloskey sold it to Henry C. Wigley, Sr. and Henry C. Wigley, Jr. In 1946, Henry Sr. sold it to Henry Jr., and in 1979 Mr. and Mrs. Wigley Jr. sold a portion of "Abington" to the present owners, William and Barbara Caillouette.
