7. Description

Architectural Classification: Late 19th and 20th Century Revivals:

Late Gothic Revival

Materials: foundation: concrete walls: brick roof: asphalt

Describe present and historic physical appearance.

St. Joseph Catholic Church is built in the Gothic Revival style. The church is a traditional, rectangular, gable-roofed building with a vestibule and steepled tower centrally located on the front end. Brick bearing walls set on an elevated concrete foundation tooled to simulate cut stone. Carpeted concrete steps with wrought iron guardrails approach the main entrance to the vestibule, which consists of a pair of unadorned modern wooden doors surmounted by a Gothic transom with simple Gothic tracery. A bracketed overdoor shelters the entry. Two small Gothic windows sit above the overdoor, just below an architrave moulding which wraps around the square steeple tower. Another architrave moulding, at the level of the peak of the main gable roof, forms the square base for the octagonal steeple roof. Between the two architrave mouldings is a large louvered Gothic opening with tracery. Side elevations are each divided into eight bays by brick buttresses with diagonal buttresses, set against the corners of the main block of the church. Gothic windows with simple tracery are located in the middle six bays on each The double-hung sash windows have recently been replaced with textured glass panes. Dark brown brick surrounds contrast with the light brown brick of the main body of the church and the steeple surround. The brick surrounds are inset along the vertical sides of each window, corbel outward at the haunch of the arch, and are flush with the wall along the arch. There is a rectangular window opening with a simple 1-over-1, double-hung sash in the basement wall beneath each of the side Gothic windows. A small gabled vestibule, housing stairs to the basement and the first floor sanctuary, is centrally located at the rear of the church. A small, round, stained glass window, visible over the alter in the sanctuary, is located in the main wall over the peak of the roof of the vestibule. On each side of the steeple tower and the rear roof of the vestibule is a single Gothic window identical to those along the sides of the church. Other than replacement glazing in the original Gothic windows and a recent wrought iron guardrail along the stairs, the exterior of the church appears to be intact.

The interior of the church was almost completely remodelled in 1938. Only the small rooms next to the altar and the balcony railing appear to be intact. All of the wood trim in the sanctuary has been removed and the walls and ceiling refinished with coarse textured plaster which returns to the window stops. The basement has also been remodeled.

A small shed-roof enclosure has been added to the north side of the steeple tower.

State significance of property, and justify criteria, criteria considerations, and areas and periods of significance noted above.

St. Joseph Catholic Church is eligible for the National Register under Criterion C as an excellent example of Gothic Revival ecclesiastical architecture on a scale suited to a small, western rural town.

Shortly after Hardin was established, the town's Catholic community erected a small wood frame building for use as a temporary place of worship. The congregation was served by priests from St. Xavier's Mission, some 23 miles up the Big Horn River south of Hardin. The Catholic Church sold Hardin's original church building in 1917 and began holding services in other buildings, such as the Sullivan Block, until their new permanent building could be finished. Omaha contractor, J.W. Russell began work on this Gothic Revival church building in the spring of 1919, and the first services were held in the new sanctuary on December 25, 1919.

The architect for the St. Joseph Catholic Church is unknown; however, it is a traditional Gothic church building. A modest building when compared to more elaborate churches in larger population centers, it never-the-less features characteristic Gothic elements: a symmetrical vertical emphasis achieved through steeply-pitched roofs, tall Gothic windows with tracery and transoms, the raised main floor, and the tall, steeple-capped central portico which dominates the front view of the building.

Although Gothic Revival was the style of choice for churches built in Hardin during the early 20th century, St. Joseph Catholic Church is the only such church in town which still retains integrity of design and location. The Congregational Church sets at its original location but has been significantly altered, while the Evangelical and Reformed German Lutheran Church has been beautifully restored but has been moved to the Big Horn County Museum east of town.

St. Joseph Catholic Church is being nominated as an addendum to Historic Resources of Hardin.
